Sidetrack

wanted to give other suggestions.
Walker also has received a response — and demands for more artwork, Alternative Tan, Walker's regular employer, asked her to do the window art for its Lincoln salons.
One of Walker's caricatures strikes close to Durand's heart. "Her best effort is my daddy," she said. "He died last summer. Every time I come in here, I see him."
Her favorite character is "Jake," a fan with a big red cowboy hat. As she walked around the room, she found Jake twice — once a part of the YMCA fans.
"Every time I look at it, I find something else," she said. Durand said she expected several hundred people during the game Thursday night — living people, not cartoons. Two of those might be the Walkers.
"We can't get tickets," Walker said. "We'll see; we'll probably sit down at the Sidetrack to watch it."

Premiere

"Nothing like this ever happens around here."
Jennifer Jett, 38, appeared in "To Wong Foo" as an extra and said the production went very well.
Jett even had the chance to meet and talk with Swayze, one of the stars of the film.
"He is an excellent performer," Jett said. "He was very personable and professional."
Beeban Kidron, director of "To Wong Foo," said she was happy to see familiar faces once again.
"It's wonderful to see all these recognizable faces," Kidron said. "These people were my family while we were filming here."
Speaking to the audience before the show, Kidron addressed how both the film itself and the making of the film helped deal with stereotypes.
"Just as many people have preconceived notions about drag queens," Kidron said. "We had preconceived notions about people from Nebraska."
"While filming, our notions were turned around by the embracing and kindness we received from everybody we met. This premiere is our way to say 'Thank you' to all of the people here in Nebraska who helped make this film come together."

Also before the show, the crown for "Queen of Snydersville" was awarded to Sheza Mann, 39, based on audience response.
KFRX morning show partners Kristi London and Andy Vaughn showed up in cross-gender make overs.
London said she did learn one important lesson from the experience.
"I realize now how uncomfortable those tuxedo rental shoes really are," she said.
But it was worth it.
"It's a different world," London said. "It was fun, but I'm happy to be a woman."
Before the film, Kidron did note that making the film in Nebraska was not without challenges.
"It was a difficult time trying to make men look like beautiful women in the Nebraska heat," she said. "Plus, I was very pregnant at the time (of filming)."
But the end result made all the discomfort worth it, Kidron said.
"We think this is one of the few films which is both wholesome and revolutionary," Kidron said, "and we're hoping that this combination will help win America's heart."
