

Lady punk hitting Omaha

From Staff Reports

Punk rock fans who are a little sick of the typically male-dominated world of rock-n-roll will have the opportunity to explore their feminine sides tonight at the Ranch Bowl in Omaha.

The Muffs and Lunachicks, two bands that have been making names for themselves in the alternative music industry in recent years, will take the stage tonight at 9 for an all-ages show.

The Muffs are fronted by guitarist/vocalist Kim Shattuck, who founded the band with bassist/backup vocalist Ronnie Barnett in early 1991. Drummer Roy McDonald rounds off the Los Angeles-based trio.

Touring in support of the band's latest album, "Blonder and Blonder," the Muffs have gained widespread recognition for their catchy songwriting and energetic live shows. The group's blend of punk and pop musical influences has been echoed in the sounds emanating from today's modern rock stations and bands such as Green Day.

Lunachicks is a five-piece band that has been around since 1987. This all-girl ensemble has made a point of challenging previous stereotypes surrounding female rock bands with its collection of hard-rocking and unabashedly blunt songs.

The band's latest album, "Jerk of All Trades," has received rave reviews from critics and fans alike.

Tickets for tonight's show are $5 and are available at all Ticketmaster locations and at the door.

Lusk

Aside from serving as dean, Lusk has also taught classes at the university, and his activities branched out into the community.

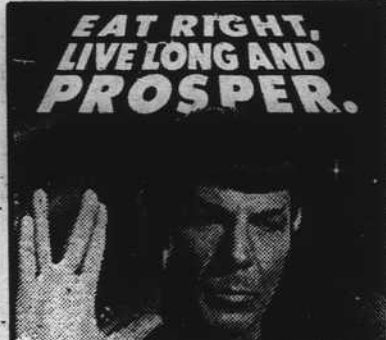

He served on the board of directors of the Lincoln Symphony Orchestra, Lincoln Arts Council, Nebraska Arts Council, and is former president of both the orchestra and the arts council.

He has published articles in "American Musical Digest," music Library Association's "Notes," "AGO Magazine," and "Opera News."

Lusk is also a veteran performer, who has given recitals across the nation, including appearances on television and in New York City's Lincoln Center.

And even after all his outside experiences, Lusk never veered far from UNL.

"This is my one and only university job," he said, "and I've loved it."
