

ASUN bills encourage communication

By Kasey Kerber

Increasing communication among student leaders, the student body and faculty will be the focus of tonight's meeting of the Association of Students of the University of Nebraska.

ASUN President Shawntell Hurtgen will propose two bills: one concerning a speaker's bureau and another to simplify the Undergraduate Bulletin. The speaker's bureau was designed as a group of 10 students and 10 faculty members who would speak to community organizations on topics from finances to hobbies, Hurtgen said.

Former UNL Chancellor Graham Spanier cut students from the bureau, she said.

Now ASUN can submit to the bureau a list of about five students. The bureau may call on those students to help speak to organizations.

The second bill suggests revising the Undergraduate Bulletin.

"We want to highlight the Undergraduate Bulletin so that incoming students will take more responsibility and be better informed of existing policies," Hurtgen said.

Efforts will be made to make the book easier for freshmen to use, she said.

"I think they put together a good package, but it's often hard for freshmen to use the book to its fullest potential," Hurtgen said.

"It seems three-fourths of the material doesn't apply to freshmen, and the book becomes too much like a dictionary that's not interesting enough to look through."

ASUN also will discuss issues brought up at today's 4:30 p.m. presidents' round-table meeting, a gathering of student organization presidents.

management major, said Holmes drew her into his lectures.

"He's like a historian," she said. "He teaches the class as if he's story telling. You really feel like you're in World War II. And after the class, you feel like you knew Churchill and experienced his feelings."

Fagan said Holmes had definite opinions, but that he wanted to make sure students could form their own.

"He brought in guest speakers who disagreed with his ideology," she said. "That helped because you saw pros and cons to each side."

Holmes, the author of five books on the British political economy, said his class dealt with "a messy subject with loose ends," and it was important to present the facts to students.

"You must treat the facts with respect," he said. "Don't worry if the subject matter is messy, and don't twist the facts to fit the theory."

"The starting point is to know the subject," he said. "You've got to be a real expert; you've got to know what you're talking about. I always do my homework. I'm always up to date."

But it was Holmes' interest and concern for his students that especially impressed Fagan. She said the student-professor relationship was on a personal level, and Holmes was always available to talk about any subject matter.

Means said Holmes' concern for students helped make the experience a good one.

"He was always available to us at all times. He was always at our college, asking us if we needed help and what we were struggling with," she said. "Most teachers wait for you to come to them, but he always came to us."

Work began the end of August, but may not be completed until Thanksgiving, said Kevin Herr, assistant campus landscape architect.

"The bulk of the planting won't be finished until later this fall when certain trees go dormant," Herr said.

Kim Todd, campus landscape architect, has put together a native-Nebraska scheme for the landscaping of the building, Herr said.
