Media, nonprofits united today

By Jenny House Staff Reporte

It's a discussion to shed light on the Next Century.'

The symposium will bring together members from both areas today in the Nebraska Union, said coordinator available services be known.

Charlyne Berens.

"We want both the nonprofits and the media to come to a better understanding with one another to meet both of their goals," said Berens, the assistant to the dean of the College of to present their information. Like Journalism and Mass Communica-

About 30 panelists from the media and nonprofit organizations will participate in the symposium.

The media and nonprofit organizations often work together, Berens clude Pulitzer Prize winners Gil Gaul, said, but their relationship is sometimes strained.

There's two sides," she said. "On the relationship between nonprofit one hand, most nonprofits want covorganizations and the media "Into erage, they don't have a lot of money to advertise. They have volunteer workers and they want their word out to attract more help and let their

'News writers and broadcasters want to include the nonprofits," she said, "but they have limits involving staff, time and space."

Nonprofits often do not know how business and government, Berens said, nonprofits should be watched because they handle large sums of money and are still open to corrup-

Guests at the symposium will ina reporter from The Philadelphia Inquirer, and Marjie Lundstrom, metro editor of the Sacramento Bee.

John Quinn, former editor of USA Today and deputy director of The Freedom Forum, will express the media's view on news coverage of nonprofit institutions.

Ron Brown, assistant NU football coach, will give a luncheon speech regarding nonprofit organizations. Brown organizes four statewide Christian summer camps for disadvantaged children.

"Into the Next Century" is scheduled to last from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. The cost is $10 for the public and $5 for students.

Students who have not preregistered are welcome to come, Berens said; they will miss out only on lunch.

Outside of meeting that priority, he said, the regents do not have the authority to determine what faculty members research.

"There may be research projects that I might not see the reason that question is being pursued," he said, but five to 10 years down the line, that research may result in some finding that changes the world."

The Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources and UNMC already do extensive research that benefits Nebraska, Wilson said.

Miller said he didn't mind where federal research money was spent, but state dollars should be spent on research that affects state taxpay-

He said it did not make sense to research something that wouldn't benefit Nebraskans.

Wilson disagreed.

"Miller's 19-page treatise re-fers to research that has no prospect of having any value," he said. Sometimes research exploring areas that seem so removed turns out to be research that makes some huge quantum leap and changes the world."

Even if NU research led to a new theory of relativity, Miller said, it would be hard to justify that research to a Nebraska farmer.

The regents will meet today at 9 a.m. in Varner Hall.

Buildings

Regent Robert Allen of Hastings, a long-time proponent of renovating UNL buildings, said he was happy the projects would soon be under

"The renovation in Burnett Hall is long overdue," he said. "It's been for too many years."

Though new projects should not be put ahead of renovations, Allen said, he supports the union expansion because students support it.

Architects will start designing the Nebraska Union expansion in October 1996, said Daryl Swanson, union director. The expansion should be completed in March 1998, he said.

Unlike the other projects, the union expansion definitely will be noticed. 'It's going to be very disruptive,'

Swanson said.

During construction, Swanson said, there will be an interim main entrance because most of the expansion will take place on the north side.

The expansion also means getting rid of Broyhill Fountain - and that upsets Allen.

"I hate to see that fountain go, even if they do fill it up with Tide soap occasionally," he said. "It's a beautiful thing to have."

Other UNL projects up for approval include:

Budgets for elevator maintenance projects at Oldfather Hall and Clifford Hardin Nebraska Center for Continuing Education.

Budget for College of Dentistry asbestos abatement and ceiling replacement.

Budget for the State Capitol steam-line improvements.
