Tab Benoit brings his brand of Cajun-style blues to Omaha's Jones Street Brewery Thursday.

the presence of only one instrument each. But Ricker, Nelson, and Robinson more than manage to hold their own with what they have, and it would be hard to ask for anything more than that.

Tickets for Ricker's show at the Zoo Thursday night are $3. The music starts at 9.

On the other side of the Platte River, Tab Benoit will be letting his own style of blues loose at the Jones Street Brewery.

Benoit is a practitioner of the Cajun blues style — one that may be lesser known in the Texas-blues dominated Midwest, but no less fiery and appealing.

His latest release, "Standing on the Bank," is a perfect example of this technique. Made with a two-track recorder and most of the final cuts recorded on the first take, this album has a raw and basic feel that is usually made available only in live performances.

Benoit will take the stage at Jones Street around 9 p.m. Tickets are $8 in advance, $9 the day of the show.

Coverage

Denny, program director at KETV.

"People were watching all over town, whether they were at work or at home," Denny said. "They were glued to their sets."

KOLN-KGIN, Channels 10/11, also broadcast coverage for much of the day.

Charlie Peterson, the station's program manager, said that the clues of what television viewers wanted were upfront.

"Normally, at 9 a.m., we run 'Regis and Kathy Lee,'" Peterson said, "but they didn't even tape an episode to be shown today, so we didn't have any choice but to start the coverage at 9 a.m."

KMTV, Channel 3, even cut into national coverage about 2 p.m. to show local reaction to the verdict.

"In the past, quite honestly, it was a very hot topic and people wanted to know everything they could about it," said Loren Tobia, the station's news director.

TV

carried by nearly every major news, sports and entertainment network, culminated in one brief, collective surge of emotion as the "Trial of the Century" drew to a close.

The event was carried live on all news- and entertainment-oriented channels such as ABC, NBC, CBS, FOX, E!, WGN, CNN, Headline News and Court TV, with uninterrupted coverage from early morning until late afternoon.

ESPN, ESPN2, FX, and MTV ran updates all through the day and showed the verdict live with in-depth analysis provided by qualified "experts," or in MTV's case, Tabitha Soren.

The Univision Network, an all-Spanish network, carried the verdict live — with subtitles.

Even Hollywood got in on the action. Oliver Stone, best known for producing and directing controversial films such as "JFK," "Natural Born Killers," "Born on the Fourth of July," "Platoon" and the upcoming "Nixon," has bought the rights to tell Simpson's story on the big screen.

Outside the courthouse, people started gathering early in the morning, trying to get a glimpse of the players in this legal chess game.

After the verdict, cameras and news helicopters followed Simpson as he rode home in a white minivan. People offering support lined the freeway, and the whole scene was reminiscent of ... well, where it all started, with the White Bronco.

The celebration among the crowded mass outside the courthouse was replayed in kitchens, cafeterias, classrooms, office buildings and courthouses through the rest of the day.

Some people came pretty close, though. Some were ecstatic, some were aghast, and all seemed to have opinions ready to share with TV reporters.

By mid-afternoon, courthouse coverage began to give way to cartoons, talk shows and various other mid-afternoon syndicated television fare.

And as the scene outside the courthouse was replayed one last time, so was the image of one man outside the courthouse holding a sign reading "O.J.'s Guilty," bowing his head and preparing to return to daily life.

Life without the O.J. Simpson trial.
