Chain letter warns of LSD danger

By Jeff Zeleny
Senior Reporter

A chain letter sent recently to Lincoln elementary schools warned parents about the danger of a blue star tattoo that could contain LSD.

The letter was mailed from an unknown group, said Becky Wild, director of student services at Lincoln Public Schools. There have been no tattoos found in city schools.

"This is not substantiated at all," Wild said Tuesday. "These type of chain letters come out every two years."

Lincoln police Lt. Duaine Bullock said he assumed the tattoo would be similar to the kind children lick and stick on their arms. The LSD, which usually is sold in a powdered form, could either be absorbed through the skin or the tongue, he said.

"You never know what someone's going to put LSD on," Bullock said.

Information about the chain letter was reprinted in a newsletter that was sent to elementary school parents, Wild said. Parents were told to be aware of "comic strip tattoos," she said.

"Generally this alarms parents more than it educates them," Wild said.

Although there have been no reports of tattoos, Wild said, parents should notify authorities if they see their children with this type of tattoo.

But Bullock said parents should not be worried about LSD.

"I don't think there is a big epidemic," he said, "We've seen this before."

Food drive scheduled for game

When you go to next week's football game, remember to take your can of pork and beans.

Lincoln Food Bank's annual "Kick-in-a-Can" event is scheduled for the Oct. 14 game against Missouri.

"Kick-in-a-Can" is a program that started 12 years ago to help raise food and supplies for Lincoln's needy, said Wendie Baker, executive director of the Food Bank of Lincoln. The drive averages at least 2,000 cans each year.

The most profitable year was 1993, when more than 4,000 cans and about $2,500 was collected.

Baker said the Food Bank would like to beat that record this year.

"A lot depends on people remembering their canned goods," Baker said.

After food is collected, the Food Bank distributes it to more than 75 charities in the Lincoln area, she said.

"We're a central collection agency," Baker said.

A lot of the food is distributed to the working poor — those who aren't unemployed but aren't making enough money to make ends meet, she said.

Fans should bring only non-perishable canned foods such as meats, beef stew, soup and canned fruit. High-protein foods like peanut butter also are needed, Baker said.

The Food Bank also needs personal-care products such as shampoo, soap, detergent and toothbrushes.

"It's a nice thing to get in an emergency food box," she said.

The number of canned goods is expected to increase this year because of a new program implemented by the University of Nebraska-Lincoln. Canned goods can be purchased at Broyhill Fountain before the game Saturday.

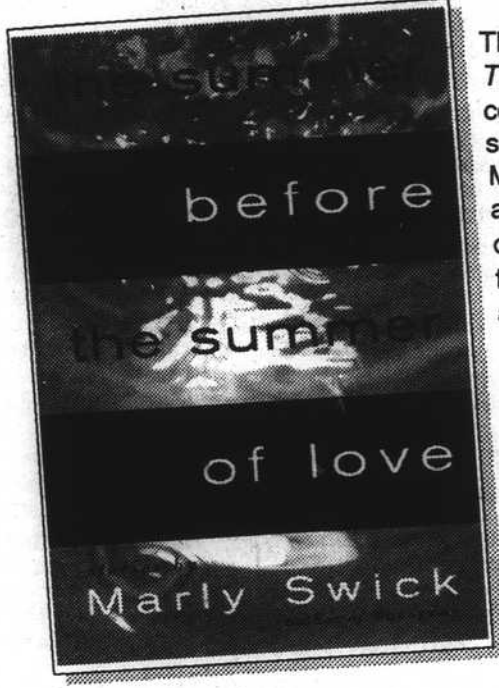

University Food Stores will provide the canned goods, said Viann Schroeder, publications management director.

No profit will be made from the sales.

"It's a wonderful new twist that the university came up with," she said. "It should make a big difference."

The Summer Before The Summer Of Love

The stories in The Summer Before the Summer Of Love seductively combine a sense of life's barren sorrow with a sensual fullness. Marly Swick is consistently original and unflinching in her observations of the dynamics that develop between friends and lovers, parents and children, husbands and wives.

Swick is a well known Nebraska author and teacher. She has received several awards, including the National Endowment of the Arts Fellowship.

COL. MARGARETHE CAMMERMEYER

Colonel Margarethe Cammermeyer joined the Army student nursing program while a student at the University of Maryland. She served at an evacuation hospital in Vietnam, for which she won the Bronze Star. She has been married and has four children, and her sexual identity was revealed in 1989 when she applied to be Chief Nurse of the National Guard. She was discharged in 1992. Colonel Cammermeyer is the highest-ranking military official to challenge the "don't ask, don't tell" policy. Her book recounting her experiences is entitled Serving in Silence. It was recently made into an Emmy-winning TV movie starring Glen Close and co-produced by Barbara Streisand.
