Mary Peeler speaks Friday on the history and future of the NAACP.

man in search of an eagle who, along the way, met what he thought were three strange birds: a woodpecker, a vulture and a chicken.

The woodpecker knocked everything he could, the vulture wallowed in the dirt and the chicken strutted around the barnyard in circles.

Finally the old man found another bird with a glide in its stride. It was an eagle, which he taught to stretch its wings and fly high over the mountains.

Peeler said these birds reminded her of some people. The woodpeckers knock down and criticize everything, the vultures wallow in gossip and the chickens have no goals or ambitions — they just walk in circles.

But the eagles soar, she said.

"How many people are there in this world who do not know that they are eagles?" she asked. "The eagles do the right thing, speak out against wrong, run against the grain."

"Each of us have an eagle inside of us. My challenge to you: Stretch out your wings and fly."
