Nebraska linebacker Chad Kelsay sacks Missouri quarterback Brandon Corso in the Huskers' win Saturday. The Husker defense had four sacks on the day.

Shutout bolsters Blackshirt pride

By Derek Samson
 Senior Reporter

After a 57-0 shutout of Missouri Saturday, Nebraska's defense has started to mirror what it did last season.

And with four of its last five opponents rated in the top 15, it better hope it is.

Last year, Nebraska gave up 74 points in a three-game stretch in non-conference action, and opponents averaged 389 yards of offense during those games.

But once the Huskers started Big Eight play, they only gave up 65 points in the final seven games.

This year, Nebraska allowed 87 points in its first five games, including 38 points and 796 total yards to Michigan State and Arizona State combined.

But now, it's conference time. Free safety Tony Veland said with the quality of the Big Eight, the Husker defense knew it had to improve.

"We've been giving up way too many points all season," Veland said. "It was a goal (a shutout) we set this season, and one we hadn't met until (Saturday). So it was real important.

"It wasn't so much what people were saying, it was just ourselves. We knew we could play better. We knew we had to come in here and play well because we have a lot of good teams coming up. The Big Eight Conference is probably the best in the nation right now."

Linebacker Jared Tomich said the defense finally felt good when it walked off the field and glanced at the score.

"It's a good feeling to see that egg on the board," he said. "We've been trying to do that all year. We put the emphasis on that every game — trying to keep that zero up there. It was by far the best performance of the year. Defensively, we were sound."

Not only did the Huskers not allow a point, but they also held the Tigers to only 122 yards of total offense.

Junior rover Mike Minter, who called the Husker defense dominating, said that allowing only 122 yards was the biggest statement made by the Huskers Saturday.

"That was real important because we've been looking for that all season," Minter said. "We knew we had the ability to do it, and we just wanted to prove to everybody in the nation that we have a tough defense.

"Their total offense showed that everybody came up and played big. That's the biggest part of it — everybody did their job."

The shutout came a week after Kansas State blanked the Tigers 30-0, and Missouri coach Larry Smith vowed to revamp the offense.

Tomich said Missouri's changes caused problems in practice, but not in the game.

"We were a little antsy because they had their practices closed all week, and we weren't sure what they were going to come out with," he said. "They didn't do anything that was too much different. They came out with a little option, but we run against the option every day in practice, so I don't know what they were thinking."

Women's golf second in Kansas

From Staff Reports

The Nebraska women's golf team finished in second place after leading the Marilyn Smith/Sunflower Classic at Wichita, Kan., after the first day.

The Cornhuskers shot a final round 335 Tuesday as Southern Methodist took the team title by seven strokes. Nebraska's Heidi Wall, who went into the day tied for first, shot an 84 to finish second.

The Husker men's golf team placed seventh Tuesday at the Kroger Intercollegiate Invite at Memphis, Tenn. Nebraska shot a final round 309 to move from 10th to seventh. Sophomore Trent Morrison led the Huskers individually, tying for 10th place.

Snyder

One play in that game which Snyder was questioned about Tuesday was a pass from running back J.J. Smith intended for May. But Husker cornerback Tyrone Williams intercepted the pass at the Nebraska goal line and stopped a Wildcat threat.

Snyder said he didn't gamble more in his play calling against the Huskers than against other teams.

"That pass that J.J. threw and got intercepted, I didn't see it as a gamble," Snyder said. "To do it is just part of the way you are playing. If everything is strictly by the book, you become very predictable."

Last season at Manhattan, Kansas State was supposed to have an advantage with Nebraska using third-string quarterback Matt Turman as the starter. Instead, Nebraska won 17-6, and the Husker defense held the Wildcats to 242 yards of total offense.

Kansas State changed its offense that game, going with a four-wide receiver set for most of the game instead of the one-back, one-tight end set.

Snyder said he hoped his players would remain confident after the past four games against Nebraska.

"What you'd like them to understand is if you don't play well against the University of Nebraska, you can't win," Snyder said. "If you play well and put it all together on both sides of the ball, you definitely have a chance."

NOTE:

● Nebraska linebacker Phil Ellis returned to practice Tuesday for the first time since breaking his foot more than two weeks ago. Backup quarterback Brook Berringer continued to miss practice with a sore knee, but was able to jog.
