Pro-choice rally sparks interest

By Ted Taylor
Staff Reporter

About 40 members of Students for Choice rallied outside the north entrance of Nebraska Union Thursday afternoon, calling abortion rights chants and holding signs that read "keep the law off my body" and "U.S. out of my uterus." They rallied to observe National Young Women's Day of Action. They also honored Rosie Jimenez, the first woman to die from an illegal abortion following the passage of the Hyde Amendment in 1973. The amendment denied Medicaid funding for abortions. Erin Hansbrough, the rally's organizer, said the group just wanted to be heard. "We wanted to make Students for Choice visible to the campus," said Hansbrough, a freshman journalism and English major. "The pro-choice platform in general is being out-talked on campus." Some students who walked past the rally picked up fliers and signed petitions for stopping violence at abortion clinics. As the rally drew to a close about 2 p.m., 66 students had signed the Students for Choice mailing list. That number will be added to the 35 people who already are members. Emily Poulsen, a senior environmental studies major, handed out stickers, T-shirts and sweat shirts donated by Planned Parenthood. "We're getting lots of support," she said. "Lots of people are walking by asking for information about the organization and wearing the T-shirts." "People are finally taking an interest in the matter." Tagi Adams, a senior women's study major, said she was glad to see a few men in the group. "Everyone has an obligation to be politically active," she said. "The oppression of women concerns men, too."

fore the episode, Harrold's show included clips of adult movies. "It's my workshop where I develop characters," Harrold has said. He said he made the show to develop his own acting abilities. Also on Monday, board members said, Mayor Mike Johanns will announce his recommendation to the City Council on whether it should vote to keep the public access channel. Johanns already recommended last month that the council eliminate the station. The current situation of public access use has had some negative effects on the rest of those who submit programs to the station. Board members indicated that public access interest has dropped, saying that not many people wanted to use it now. "The public access channel isn't being used very well," said Bob

Bryant, a cable advisory board member. The new community access channel, scheduled to hit the airwaves Dec. 1, will be placed on Channel 8. After rescheduling the current channels, the new channel line-up will be: Channel 8's WGN moved on Channel 14, the Channel 14 public access program on Channel 20. Other matters concerning the board included adding some written amendment changes and additions to how government and educational agencies sponsor programs on Channel 5.
