Crib features singing, slamming tonight

From Staff Reports

Peggy Seeger, a folk singer and activist famed for the song "Gonna Be An Engineer," performs in the Crib tonight at 9.

Seeger was born into one of America's most important folk traditions. Her mother, singer Ruth Crawford Seeger, married Charles Seeger, a musicologist and critic. Their children, Peggy, Peter and Mike, went on to become some of the most popular protest singers of the civil rights era.

For many years, Peggy Seeger led the Bechtham Anti-Nuclear Group (Bang), an English organization. She has also advocated other causes, including women's organizations, groups for the disabled and anti-apartheid organizations.

Before Seeger's performance, Lincoln's first "Poetry Slam" will begin at 7 p.m., featuring Liz Ahl and Ray Ronci.

In contrast to a poetry reading with a quiet audience and unflustered performers, organizer Stephen Sparling promises the Poetry Slam will be a noisy affair "with lots of people stomping their feet."

This interactive event will also feature prizes from Backtrack Records and Bluestem Books.

Both activities are free and sponsored by the Office for Student Involvement.

alone to face her uncertain future.

Even with subtitles, the story shines. Although much of the beauty is lost in translation, the performances are wonderful.

Internationally acclaimed screen-diva Anna Magnani is simply incredible as Mamma Roma. Ettore Garofolo is wonderful as the sullen, bitter son who just wants to fit in and Silvana Corsini is delightful as the local flirt who Ettore falls in love with.

Sure, it's in black and white. Sure, it's old. Sure, it's got some problems that audiences would never expect in a current film. But "Mamma Roma" is still a delightful gem.

"Mamma Roma" is playing tonight and Friday with showtimes at 7 and 9 p.m. each day.

The Facts

Film: "Mamma Roma"
Stars: Anna Magnani, Ettore Garofolo, Silvana Corsini
Director: Pier Paolo Pasolini
Grade: B

Dreams," sets the mood with its blues progressions and full sound. The song has as much feeling as any release in the last few years. And that emotion pours through Cain's guitar like a bedside confession.

"Trouble Makin' Woman," a throwback to the days of barbecue and sawdust blues, conjures images of smoke-filled recording studios and old skin-and-bones blues men, clapping their hands along with the singer.

"At the Club" is Cain's tribute to the art of picking up a date. With a variety of voices and a nonstop background chatter, Cain uses his unique charm to try to find love in a darkly-lit bar.

For blues fans, "Somewhere Along the Way" promises to be a satisfactory purchase.

And if live music appeals more, check out Cain tonight at the Zoo Bar. The atmosphere and the nature of live performance should take some of the gleam out of Cain's music and leave it somewhat raw, as blues should be.

The cover charge for tonight's performance is $5. The music begins at 9.

tions have been equally challenging, Tavares said.

"The actors have worked just as hard or harder than me to understand this material.

"I defy anyone to truly understand the meaning of a Sam Shepard play."

ations is another quality that has made him so popular, Tavares said.

"I really think he writes by setting. He sets up these situations, and then he seems to write from an explosion."

"Fool For Love" should be particularly appealing to Shepard's fans, Tavares said, because of its similarities to the playwright himself.

"This material seems to be very close to who Sam Shepard is. I think Eddie is a lot like Shepard in real life."

"Fool For Love" opens tonight and will run Friday and Saturday, and Nov.
