

Hagel says country ready for renewal

By Patty Wewel

Chuck Hagel is running for the U.S. Senate as a business man, not a politician.

There are already too many career politicians in Washington, the Omaha Republican told more than 50 people at Wednesday night's College Republicans meeting.

Career politicians, who have never held jobs outside of politics, can't understand how the real world operates, Hagel said.

Politics, he said, is about renewal. And the country is ready for both an economic and cultural renewal.

It is time, Hagel said, to cut the size and scope of government, to decrease regulations and to open new markets. Government power needs to return to the states, counties and cities. That return would make politicians accountable to the people.

However, he said, a cultural renewal would be a bigger challenge. Values such as personal accountability, self-dignity and common sense need to be anchored in programs such as welfare.

Until the nation focuses on cultural changes, other changes won't happen, he said.

Hagel said his campaign would be free of smear tactics. Political campaigns are negative and vicious, he said, which discourages good candidates from running. He wants to set an example that a campaign can be effective without being vicious.

"Remember one thing, you don't get a senator back for six years. The job is about judgment, background and experience."

want to see him," Lewis said.

He may be reserved, but Kozak likes to get out of the office.

"I enjoy running every day," he said. "Sometimes it's nice to let the rust fall off."

Working at Big Eight universities has made him a "college football junkie," and he and his wife attend several concerts in Ames, Iowa, each year.

Their three children have followed in Kozak's academic footsteps.

His daughter, Jenny, graduated from Vanderbilt University with a degree in business and math and teaches high school in Boston.

Joe, a sophomore environmental engineering major, attends Notre Dame. Greg, a Notre Dame graduate, is now in graduate school at the University of Michigan studying geological sciences.

His two sons waited to attend Notre Dame until after their father left the school.

"My son told me he'd never go to a university where his dad was the principal."
