The bill would have not only provided for the institute at the University of Nebraska at Omaha, but for a separate vice-chancellor position as well.

The regents are still set, however, to decide on a measure that would create the Omaha Institute of Information Science, Technology and Engineering at their monthly meeting this Saturday.

The proposal also would establish the UNO College of Information Science and Technology and would look at enhancing the current engineering programs offered at both UNO and the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

James Milliken, corporation secretary for the regents, said that Tuesday's legislative action would in no way affect how the regents voted Saturday.

Abboud's bill, while it had the same name, created a different kind of institute and radically changed the administration structure of the university," he said.

'His bill would have transferred administration of the engineering college here at UNL to a new vicechancellor at UNO," he said.

"The institute that is being proposed to the Board of Regents doesn't change the administration structure.'

Milliken, who testified on behalf of UNL, said he was pleased that the bill was not advanced. "This gives the board the best opportunity to now move forward with the institute being proposed to them Saturday."

Regents Chairwoman Nancy O'Brien of Waterloo said she never felt it was the Legislature's place to find a solution to the engincering problem.

"I always felt it was up to the administration, the regents and the business community," she said.

"One of the important aspects of the proposed institute is that it was developed jointly by UNL and UNO," she said. "I respect the pro-UNO," cess.'

During testimony supporting the bill, Abboud told the committee that the lack of engineering programs in Omaha affected the economic vitality of the city.

"It has raised concerns from my constituents and Omaha businesses," he said.

Omaha Mayor Hal Daub encouraged the committee to advance the bill, saying the bill would serve the needs of all Nebraskans.

Daub said the bill was "a step in the right direction for technology education in our state.'

New Hampshire's results were likely to winnow the GOP field, though none of the struggling candidates would immediately admit as much. Forbes, particularly, had reason to be disap-pointed. He had been tied for the New Hampshire lead a month ago, but his effort to promote a flat income tax wilted as moderate voters chose between Dole and Alexander.

Ken Haar, who cast the lone vote against the ordinance, said full-nudity businesses don't bring such troubles. "The places that exist outside the city aren't a problem," he said. Haar said Lincoln didn't need the ordinance because no such establishments have sprung up in Lincoln. Before the vote, Haar raised ques-

Lincoln City Attorney Bill Austin said the court would have to decide between the two.

A U.S. Supreme Court ruling in the case of Barnes v. Glen's Theater gave government the right to regulate public nudity, he said. That supreme court decision could support the ordinance where city liquor laws couldn't, Aus-

Austin said he would be careful in prosecuting cases in which nudity was used for true artistic expression.

Jerry Shoecraft, councilman at Coleen Seng, councilwoman for the large, voted in favor of the ordinance but said he didn't think it was neces-would prevent Lincoln from develop- sary, because potential nude businesses weren't coming to Lincoln.

Shoecraft said banning nudity was a matter of political correctness and community interest.

Alexander and Dole supported the NAFTA and GATT free-trade agreements as critical to boosting American exports in a global economy; Buchanan blames the deals for sending American manufacturing jobs overseas, and stagnating wages at home.

Buchanan is also far more outspoken than either Dole or Alexander on social issues. He pledges to be the "most pro-life president in history" and vows that no avowed homosexuals will serve in a Buchanan administration.

Clinging to hopes for a late-night comeback, Dole did not concede. But he was resigned to placing second in New Hampshire, again.
