Buses

schedule.

Although Worth did not have the exact figures available, he said he would know if drivers on Route 24 had to leave behind a high number of passengers.

"If there was a substantial problem," he said, "we would certainly try to solve it."

When Marnie Hatfield rides the bus Wednesdays and Fridays at 10:05 a.m., she said the driver usually had to leave three or four students at East Campus. More passengers are left behind at other stops along the way, said Hatfield, a junior family science major.

On Mondays, every passenger gets a ride because of the additional bus, she said.

"We always use the full capacity of both buses (on Wednesdays and Fridays)," she said. "The bus drivers try to pack in as many as they can."

Worth said bus drivers could only fill the buses to a certain extent because passengers were not allowed to stand beyond the white line behind the driver.

"Otherwise, it just depends on how close everybody wants to stand," he said.

Hatfield said she usually had to stand during her rides.

But she confirmed that the situation had improved since January.

"They (the bus drivers) are close to getting everybody on the bus," she said. "But an additional morning bus on Wednesdays and Fridays would definitely be helpful."

Women

According to information from the department of institutional research and planning, the number of women faculty members increased by 2 percent in 1995-96.

In 1994-95, 404 of 1,521 faculty members were women, or about 27 percent.

For the current academic year, 433 of 1,516 faculty members, or about 29 percent, are women.

But UNL administrators need to do more than just hire women, Trammell said.

"We need to make the faculty aware of the importance of making a climate warm for women," she said.

Also, Trammell said, better mentoring for junior women faculty was needed.

"We need more efforts to integrate them into life at the university and in Lincoln," she said.

Equality for women on campus always has been a problem, Trammell said, and solutions won't come easily.

"Women didn't come to this situation overnight," she said. "We are changing centuries of behavior and attitudes. This is an old problem, and it won't be fixed quickly."

"We have to hire, promote, mentor and retain women. This is not a simple issue."

Mary McGarvey, associate professor of economics, said she hadn't seen much improvement in the status of women in the past year.

"It doesn't seem like there is a specific plan to hire and promote women," McGarvey said.

McGarvey said the economics department had two women faculty members and had no plans to hire more.

In the long run, the lack of women professors will hurt students, she said.

"It will affect students when they get to the real world and have to deal with men and women of different races and backgrounds," McGarvey said.

She has been hurt, too, by the lack of women in her college, McGarvey said.

"Women have different perspectives on issues," she said. "I don't get that point of view."

Two UNL students, Gabrielle Dalton and Virginia Newton, also will serve on the committee. Carmen Maurer, associate general counsel for the University of Nebraska, will serve as consultant to the committee.

Corrections & Clarifications

Because of a production and editing error, one line of Friday's story about Joan Leitzel accepting a job at the University of New Hampshire at Durham was missing. The paragraph should read as follows:

One challenge, she said, is working with the low level of funding the university receives from the state.
