

Artist's paintings lurk in the basement

By Patrick Hambrecht
Art Critic

Joe Broghammer's pastel paintings all tell a story of a cold, clammy basement where half-human things are tied up and tortured.

His "I fish" show is on display at the Haydon Gallery, 335 N. Eighth St., until April 27.

A strong feeling of self-ridicule and contempt cries out from many of Broghammer's paintings, particularly "A small town in preparing for the biggest art show it can afford." In it, a haphazard collection of garbage is hung by ropes from the ceiling of an empty stage, with a painted banner saying "Exploring One's Inner Self, a Show By Larry Gerber 1996."

Obviously mocking a gallery show very much like his own, Broghammer questions the very point of his artwork in "A small town." Again in "Testing the Brick Wall Theory," an arrow sign points at the barely alive objects in the painting, announcing "the bad artists exhibit."

The dim green light of a scummy pond illuminates many of Broghammer's paintings, including "Swimming with a frightened esophagus, as though we're seeing his pitiful creations underwater."

The painting shows a naked duck-man blindfolded and hanging from ropes, with a docile expression on his billed face. Beaded ropes are stuck with fishhooks in his skin, and knives lie carelessly tossed beneath him. It's hard to tell whether the mallard man is underwater or not, but either way, his situation is unenviable.

There's not much joy in Broghammer's paintings, only a dull sense of the pathetic and the pitiful, as each of his ugly creatures starves for sanity and attention in its own dirty cellars.

The Haydon Gallery is open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Saturday. Admission is free.

PEOPLE

From the Associated Press

PASADENA, Calif. — Angela Bassett, whose career has taken her from the projects to Broadway and Hollywood, won top honors at the NAACP Image Awards for her performance in "Waiting to Exhale."

Bassett was named best lead actress and Loretta Divine best supporting actress for their roles in the film, about the lives and loves of four close friends.

"Waiting to Exhale" was named best motion picture of the year Saturday at the 27th annual awards ceremony.

The ceremony was taped at the Pasadena Civic Auditorium and will be aired April 23 on Fox.
