$15,000 to $20,000.

The lost revenue would have to be supplemented by an increase in student fees, Swanson said.

The board also approved this year's space allocation proposals.

Space allocation decisions were difficult this year because of the large number of organizations requesting space in the City Union, which has limited space, Swanson said.

The Chi Alpha Christian organization and the Bahai organization will be offered an office in the East Union and storage space in the City Union.

Model United Nations, which has an office in the East Union, will be offered a space in the City Union.

Both Mortar Board and the Innocents Society will keep their offices on the fourth floor of the City Union. But because of plans to update the heating and cooling systems that are housed on the fourth floor, both organizations risk losing their spaces in December.

amazing.

The average size of both the lectures and the labs was under 30 people, although there were 36 people in this semester's biology course, Veomett said.

The courses used nonpublished texts, often written by the faculty members who teach the classes, he said.

"We've gotten nothing but rave reviews from people taking (the classes)," Veomett said.

Sophomore elementary education major Anna Waigo said she enjoyed the class because of the level of experience with teaching methods obtained in the class.

"I can transfer (the methods) over into my own classroom right away," she said.

Betsy Eickoff, a sophomore elementary education and Spanish major, said the class was helpful.

"Hands-On allows people to understand the concepts — you get more involved in the learning," Eickoff said.
