

New club storms into old location of Hurricane bar

From Staff Reports

By the grace of God and a liquor license, Lincoln will have a new dance-oriented nightclub downtown.

The club, called Hangar 18, will feature industrial, techno and dance music and will move into the space at 1118 O St., which formerly was occupied by the popular Hurricane bar.

The owners of Hangar 18, brothers Blue and J.R. Montgomery, Julie Squires and John Russell, all of Plattsmouth, own the Union Station bar there.

"It (Hangar 18) will be like Ten Lies in Omaha, but not as polished," Russell said.

They had planned to open Hangar 18 by September, but hit a bureaucratic snag that will push back the opening date. The problem they are facing is an ordinance that says that an establishment cannot serve liquor within 300 feet of a school or a school-owned building, Russell said.

Hangar 18 is located across from a building owned by Southeast Community College.

If Hangar 18 is denied a liquor license, the owners will apply for a license to sell beer only, Russell said. But if that happened, it would not be an industrial dance music club. Instead, "It would be just like the old Hurricane," he said.

Russell cited the bars Wallaby's Down Under Pub, Grotto's and Decadence as being close to the Southeast Community College-owned building also. These places are able to serve liquor.

What I did on my summer vacation

I came here from California for the second week of the 5-week session. I like it here, except for the rain. I met a few friends, they tell me it picks up around here during the school year.
