

Dancer stresses class interaction during two-week visit to UNL

"The results are very satisfying. There's varying degrees of how people respond," she said. "There's always a couple of kids whose eyes light up — they see an alternative. They come up to me and say, 'Where can I find more of this?'"

As for those who are scared of dancing, as Coleman puts it, the gap between breathing and moving, and moving and dancing, isn't so big.

"What's important is not so much what I teach, but if they can interact with their fellow students or themselves in a way that they hadn't before, that's what's valuable."

"It's unique in a university setting," she said. "It's receiving information in other ways — pro-active learning. It's giving them an alternative to what they'd normally get."

But getting students to respond to a new form of learning can prove to be a difficult task, she said.

"It's hard work to introduce people to something they didn't necessarily know they wanted to be introduced to," she said. "It's a challenge for me, just as it's a challenge for students."

But for the most part, Coleman said, her classes go well.

Cigar bar serves exotic martinis

By SEAN MCCARTHY Staff Reporter

Have a martini? What kind? At Libations, 317 S. 11th St., you get a jaw-dropping 30 selections of martinis. Banana split, raspberry truffle and black forest are some of the more colorful martini concoctions.

The upscale cigar bar has been in business since last February. Along with martinis, Libations also has a wide variety of single malts scotches. Unlike traditional bottled scotches, single malt scotches are more refined and are usually aged longer. One scotch they have has been aged 25 years, and needless to say, the price for a shot of that one will set you back a paycheck.

If it's a lounge you seek, Libations definitely has the look. The oak tables and chairs and a colorful wall mural give it a nice, relaxed feel. It also has a great ventilation system for those who don't want to smell like a cigar after going into a lounge.

Ken Semler, owner of Libations, said he saw a need for Lincoln to have a cigar bar. Drawing inspiration from the cigar bars on the East and West Coasts, he spent four months working on Libations before it opened. He said most customers tend to be white-collar workers in the 25-45 age group. He added that though it is upscale, everyone is welcome.

"You have to come down and see it to believe it," he said.

Semler said that having a prime location near the Cornhusker Hotel has been beneficial to his business, which he described as booming.

Game players should enjoy Libations. Chess boards, checkers, backgammon and cards are available for customer use. The tables are big enough to easily play chess, as well as enjoy a martini and a cigar.

But style does have a price. Unless you have cash, don't expect to become a Libations regular. Most of the drinks fall between $4 and $5.
