TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1996

By Cliff Hicks

Frighteners' unsuccessful entertaining

OK, not many of you have gone out and seen "The Frighteners," and I'm about to slap you all silly. There's only so much I can take.

You know? "The Frighteners?" Stars Michael J. Fox? Extremely cool special effects? Good blend of comedy, horror and suspense? Well-written plot?

Maybe the plot thing is why no one went to see it.

The summer was filled with great flicks, there's no doubt about it. There was something for everyone.

"The Rock" was one of the best damn action films I've ever seen. The cinematography was great, Nicholas Cage was marvelous and Sean Connery was... well, Sean Connery. Plus he swore a lot, which he very rarely does, and while that isn't necessarily a good thing, it created a whole new character for Connery.

"Independence Day" was a big budget B-film. It's the type of thing that would have happened if someone gave the people who are making movies for bad cable channels a lot of money. A lot of special effects, thin plot line and more special effects. It was worth a watch or two, but it wasn't "The Rock."

There was "Courage Under Fire" for those out looking for a good drama and "The Nutty Professor" for those who wanted a zany comedy that marked the return of Eddie Murphy to successful film. And then, of course, there was

"The Frighteners."

I've given a lot of thought and I mean a lot - as to why "The Frighteners" hasn't succeeded as a film. I've seen the film five times now, and I never see a film this much. Not in theaters, anyway.

No one was really quite sure how to market the film. "The Frighteners" blends comedy, supernatural thriller and horror film all into the masterful mix that rivals the "Tales From The Crypt" series.

But with anything with "Tales

BY ANN STACK Senior Reporter For students tired of running around in circles at the Lee and Helene Sapp Campus Recreation Center, inline skating is a great way to get in shape and have fun at the same time.

It's also a prime way to get to class or work, but rollerbladers must avoid potential disasters in the forms of rocks, railroad tracks and pedestrians.

In-line skating is the official term for the activity commonly called "rollerblading" because Rollerblade Inc. produced the first widely recognized model of in-line skates.

Although in-line skaters and bikers are often referred to as "public nuisances" on campus, UNL Police Chief Ken Cauble said he doesn't have a problem with skaters as long as they don't damage university property.

"The areas we'd prefer people not rollerblade on are marked with signs,' he said. These areas are by the Sheldon Memorial Art Gallery and sculpture garden.

"If they're trying to do tricks or causing damage to the property, we'd had relatively few problems with skathave to cite them for vandalism," he ers. said.

But so far, the campus police have more concerned with bikers."

the rules of safety," Cauble said. "They seem to be a good mode of transportation.'

Anyone who has experienced the pain of a rollerblading wipe-out knows that wearing the proper protection is very important to in-line skating. That includes a helmet, knee and elbow pads and wrist guards.

Over the summer, a Kansas woman visiting Omaha died from inline skating injuries after hitting her head on the pavement. She was not wearing a helmet.

"I'd like to see people wear head protection," Cauble said.

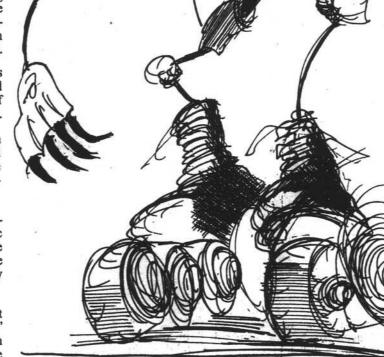

Molly Tomkins, a sophomore criminal justice major, has been inline skating for five years, and has only fallen twice. The second time was a month ago, after she got new wheels and bearings for her skates. Like many students, she doesn't wear safety equipment.

"Wrist guards are basically all I need," she said. "Knee pads and hel-mets look stupid."

Linda Herrmann, medical director at the University Health Center, said she treats relatively few people for

"Maybe they're using more body

Skater safety, courtesy important

JIM MEHSLING/DN As far as places students and faculty can skate on campus, it's free skating injuries. "Most rollerbladers are fairly cour- game, Cauble said. teous to pedestrians," he said. "I'm "They can go th "They can go through the interior of the campus, as long as they follow protection," she said. Restaurant review New pub and grill's wide variety of wings comes with hot warnings, contests, more

PAGE 9

From The Crypt" on it, you've got a fan-base who already know generally what to expect. With "The Frighteners," no one really knew what to expect.

The preview had a wall leaning out to grab a girl, Michael J. Fox doing a campy "spirit cleans-ing" and the title. I think everyone who saw the ad thought, "Well, what kind of film is it?

After five times, I'm still not sure how I would've marketed it. I'd have tried to tap into the "Tales From The Crypt" fan-base myself. And I have found people who didn't think the film was great, but none of them have disliked it, so at the very least, you'll see some cool special effects and have some fun.

It's too late to go see it at the Starship 9, but the minute it comes out on video, rush to the video store, beat down the walls and rent a copy. Trust me.

Hicks is a sophomore news-editorial and English major and a Daily Nebraskan staff reporter.

Taco salads, hamburgers and appetizers are also available.

By SEAN MCCARTHY

Restaurant Critic

paint off a wall.

Capable of seating over 250 people, bw3 seems to be on its way to becoming a fixture in the downtown bar scene. There's a good arrangement of booths and tables to prevent crowd-ing. Two big-screen TVs and an abundance of smaller sets make it a great place to watch a game while you're chowing on their wings. Dart boards and pool tables are also available.

Though bw3 has been open for almost two weeks, it has yet to have a grand opening, owner Kevin Haran said. Haran chose to wait until his staff is fully trained and tested before that event comes. The staff was tested well last weekend when the pub was packed to capacity on both nights, Haran said.

The "w3" in bw3 stands for wild wings and weck. The weck is a specialty roll that is put on hamburgers or eaten separately. It is a kaiser roll with rock salt and caraway seed that's a perfect neutralizer after cating some of the hotter varieties of wings.

KITCHEN CLERKBrian Patrick shakes up another batch of buffalo wings during the lunch hour Monday afternoon in the kitchen of bw3 Pub and Grill.

And the wings, yes, the wings. A However, the title for best wings in National Football League playoffs.

in Lincoln. The spicy garlic and the tering Hole or Grandmother's. The lected for the Super Bowl, where a hot barbecue wings are the more population of the same is what makes free-for-all contest to see how many lar choices.

to its name. Legend has it that at one better variety of wings can't be found Lincoln still goes to either The Wa-mustard or sweet barbecue wings.

Finally, four winners will be sevariety of the sauces is what makes free-for-all contest to see how many bw3 stand out. Those who crave wings the winner can eat in an hour The hottest wing, blazin', lives up milder wings will take to the honey will take place. Prizes such as T-shirts will be given away at Monday's game. of the chains, a worker accidentally spilled a container of the blazin' sauce on a wall. The sauce actually took the paint off the wall, Haran said. If that doesn't convince you, there is also a warning label that comes with the or-der. The quality of the wings is great. Those who want hot should choose the blazin'. For sheer enjoyment, bw3 offers a "cluck-off" during Monday Night is held to see how many people can eat 50 wings in 15 minutes. The win-ners go to the semifinals during the wings.

SCOTT BRUHN/DN