

ASUN to preview alma mater

Chancellor James Moeser will preview UNL's new alma mater at tonight's meeting of the Association of the Students of the University of Nebraska.

Moeser will play a tape of the new school anthem — minus the lyrics — for the senators. The song will be performed for the public on Oct. 12, during halftime of the homecoming football game against Baylor.

The alma mater will add to the strong tradition at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln and create a "bond between all the graduates of the university," ASUN President Eric Marintzer said.

ASUN also will vote on the appointment of a new senator for the graduate college. The status of the Law College senate position has not been determined yet, Marintzer said.

ASUN also will select members for various committees, he said. These are positions that open annually for ASUN committees and usually are filled during the fall semester. Many of the members will be voted on for approval at tonight's senate meeting; the remainder will be voted on next week.

The senate also will vote on approval of the Committee for Fees Allocation bylaws. CFA's first meeting was Tuesday.

Several student organizations are up for official recognition at the meeting. All student groups must be recognized by ASUN to have full access to university facilities, Marintzer said.

The homecoming committee will also give a status report.

Web workshop aids in job search students can search by entering the name of a company and city.

"It will give students information about the company and even draw a map for students, showing them how to get to the company," Mann said.

The second site, The Salary Calculator, is found at <<http://www.homefair.com/homefair/cmr/salcal.html>>. It provides student who are considering a job in another city the ability to compare the cost of living, salaries, cost of moving and other economic factors.

Mann said most students who attended the workshop preferred to stay long after the workshop ended.

"They usually get caught up in all possibilities and surf the web until five, when we close," Mann said.

The possibilities include posting a resume on the UNL Career Services web page where companies can then view it, Mann said.

While students have had success with the workshop, Mann said, the number of computers in the UNL Career Services computer lab was beginning to become a concern.

The center will try to make more room for computers, she said, and wants to offer the service to everyone.

Sigerson wants board to tune in to students

UNL, said the regents should force administrators to justify increasing costs.

Students need to have more influence on the regents, too, and regents don't even know what student issues are, he said.

"Some of the regents are out of touch," Sigerson said.

Sigerson said he would make sure a student voice would always be present at regents' meetings.

"Some regents would feel better with no student regents," he said. "That would be a serious mistake."

If regents would listen to students, Sigerson said, they would hear complaints that students aren't getting proper training for the real world. He said regents should be working to change that.

Faculty should be encouraged to get out and work in the real world, Sigerson said, so they can pass on real-world skills.

"To waste your first year (out of college) trying to learn those types of things makes you less valuable," Sigerson said.

Good teachers, on the other hand, should be rewarded, he said. Students critiques and evaluations should have more impact on rewarding tenure, he said. He also said teaching, not research, should be highly valued.

the engineering school in Omaha also marked her accomplishments, she said. The college was denied, but improvements were made to the shared engineering program.

"Everybody's satisfied, and it's on target," she said.

Other issues that have arisen during O'Brien's term have not left everyone satisfied. Sigerson has said O'Brien took advantage of access to bowl game tickets last year.

"The people I got the tickets for gave thousands, even millions, of dollars to the university," she said. "I did the right thing."

"The fact is, those people the tickets went to are friends of the university," she said. "That's what a regent is all about, trying to foster relationships with those who give to the university."

Law & Order

A look at crime on campus and in the community

ROBBERY

A 45-year-old man was robbed at gunpoint and punched at his south Lincoln apartment Monday night.

At 10:30 p.m., Gerald Sewell walked upstairs to his apartment on the 4400 block of south 48th Street and found a man waiting at his door, Lincoln police Sgt. Terry Sherrill said.

After a brief conversation with the man, Sewell told him to leave, Sherrill said.

Another, taller man appeared from a nearby staircase and allegedly brandished a handgun and demanded money from Sewell, Sherrill said. The man at the door also held a gun on Sewell, Sherrill said.

After Sewell gave them cash from his wallet, they told him to open his apartment and get more money, Sherrill said.

After searching the apartment, Sewell told them the money in his wallet was all the money he had, Sherrill said.

One of them punched Sewell in the face before the two fled, Sherrill said.

Sewell described both men as white. One was between 5 feet 8 inches and 6 feet tall and heavy. He was wearing a pull-over, short-sleeved shirt and blue jeans.

The other was at least 6 feet tall, weighing 160 to 180 pounds, with brown or black hair. He was wearing a colored shirt and blue jeans.

ASSAULT

A homeless man was attacked Sunday night by another man wielding a baseball bat at the People's City Mission.

Raul Antonio Ramirez was talking to four other men on the west side of the building on North First Street at about 1:13 a.m., Sherrill said.

They started arguing and one man went to a nearby car and retrieved a baseball bat, Sherrill said.

He allegedly hit Ramirez several times about the head and chest area, Sherrill said.

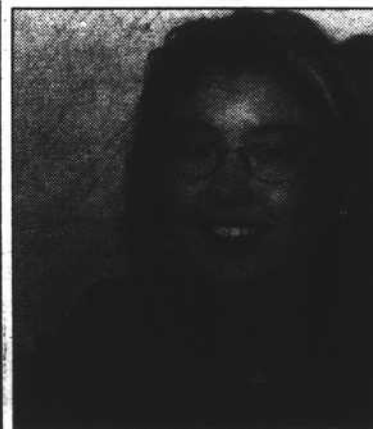

Ramirez was taken to Lincoln General Hospital and treated for a broken nose, broken rib and a cut on the back of his head that required staples, Sherrill said. He was then taken to detoxification.

Police have identified a suspect based on a vague description, but have not yet made any arrests, Sherrill said.
