Artist talks of multicultural issues

This variety is something he strives for when teaching a class. In his other visits to UNL, he's taught classes such as law, agriculture communications, marketing and poetry, as well as theater and Judaic studies.

Different classes require different teaching routines, he said, and Raz admits he sometimes doesn't always know where his lectures are heading. Still, he manages to tie it all together.

"In a law class, I did the trial scene from 'The Merchant of Venice,'" he said. "In a doctoral advanced marketing class, I threw down the challenge, 'What is art? What is marketing?'"

This semester, he's mainly worked with University Foundations classes, teaching them about the Jewish culture.

Kit Voorhees, coordinator for educational outreach for the College of Fine and Performing Arts, first saw Raz perform his one-man play "Father-Land" at the Lincoln Community Playhouse and was "blown away." He was at UNL for two three-week stints last year, and is finishing his second week here this semester. Raz performed "Father-Land" at the Kimball Recital Hall last Sunday.

"Ron (Bowlin) and Kit wanted me to be the representative for the Jewish culture (this semester)," Raz said. "I insisted that I was not going to be the spokesman for Jews. There are many people more qualified to talk about the Jewish religion."

Instead, Raz preferred to take a more light-hearted approach.

"I said I'd be the resident Jewish clown."
