

ASUN set to vote on guidelines for award

By TASHA E. KELTER

After more than three weeks of deliberation, ASUN will vote tonight on guidelines for the Outstanding Educator award.

Academic Committee chairman Bronson Riley said "little quirky things" held up getting the guidelines completed and into legislation.

Previously, Riley said, the Association of the Students of the University of Nebraska had no clear, written guidelines for the award.

"Right now we've got a foundation," Riley said.

To get the Outstanding Educator congratulatory letter, Riley said, a candidate must receive 15 or more votes, as opposed to the one vote that qualified them in previous years.

The 15-vote requirement will narrow the field of recipients, Riley said. In previous years, there were "pages and pages" of candidates.

Last weekend, ASUN president Eric Marintzer and Committee for Fees Allocation chairman John Weichmann attended the Big 12 Student Government Conference in Columbia, Mo.

The conference resulted in the formation of the Big 12 Student Government Alliance, an association developed to lobby government on "issues of mutual concern," Marintzer said.

He said the alliance would give many students the opportunity to work together.

"This is important because collectively, we represent over 300,000 students," Marintzer said.

Also during tonight's 6:30 p.m. meeting, Homecoming chairwoman Andy Vuko will address the senate regarding the Homecoming week festivities.

Vuko said she hoped to build excitement and "make sure that everyone knows this is it. This is the week we've been planning for for six months."
