

Nigerian speaker promotes Shell Oil protests

By BRIAN CARLSON
Staff Reporter

The brother of a slain Nigerian political activist described the suffering of his native Ogoni people and implored the public to protest abuses of power in that region.

Dr. Owens Wiwa, whose brother, Ken Saro-Wiwa, was executed by the Nigerian military government on Nov. 10, 1995, spoke to a University of Nebraska-Lincoln audience at Love Library Wednesday night.

He blamed the exploitation of the Ogonis on Royal Dutch-Shell oil company's environmental irresponsibility and support of Nigeria's military dictatorship.

Owens Wiwa blamed Shell for "environmental racism" in Nigeria. He said the company's oil drilling in Ogoniland had resulted in massive environmental destruction, destroying the Ogonis' farmland and causing widespread disease.

Although Shell never compensated the Ogonis financially, Owens Wiwa said, it paid millions of dollars to Nigeria's military dictators. Shell thus established itself as a "pillar of dictatorship" and enhanced the military's power, he said.

Saro-Wiwa, a leader of the Ogonis' move to protest their mistreatment, was executed after being convicted of murder by a military tribunal.

Owens Wiwa said the murders of four Ogoni chiefs, for which his brother was blamed, were actually committed by the military in an effort to divide the Ogoni people.

But the military claimed Saro-Wiwa incited the killings and held him captive for several months before his trial and execution, Owens Wiwa said.

Owens Wiwa was able to escape from Nigeria just days after his brother's execution last November. He has traveled extensively, pushing for passage of an international oil embargo on Nigeria and for protests of Shell Oil. He said although the Ogoni people lack political power in their country, the military leadership would suffer if faced with a firm world protest of its actions.

"Whatever oil you receive from Nigeria has the blood of the Ogoni people on it," he said.

Inspired by the examples of India's Mohandas Gandhi and the American civil rights movement, Owens Wiwa said he and his supporters would continue to wage a nonviolent protest against the Ogonis' abusers.

"We smile because we are angry," he said. "We don't show anger to these people, because that's what they want to see."

Moses Tafarki, a senior at Nebraska Wesleyan University who is originally from Nigeria, attended the presentation. Although not a member of the Ogoni people, he said he related to their hardships.

"It is a struggle that involves loss of life," he said. "And when life is lost, every well-mannered person from Nigeria should feel affected."

Tafarki said he knew Saro-Wiwa personally and was shocked by his death.

"He was a peaceful man who loved life and was an inspiration to many of us."
