But Endicott's return is the main focus of the match, Pettit said.

"It's a way for us to say thank you to Lori," Pettit said. "It's a way for our players to realize she is a part of this tradition."

The 29-year-old Endicott, from Springfield, Mo., is a major player in NU's tradition-rich program. She is one of only three players to have her jersey retired. Endicott played for Nebraska from 1985 through 1988, earning All-Big Eight honors all four seasons, All-America honors in 1987 and 1988.

She joined the national team in January 1989.

Endicott burst on to the international scene and was selected as the best setter at the 1992 Barcelona Olympics, leading the Americans to the bronze medal. She was also the setter on the team that finished seventh in the Atlanta Games.

If Endicott leaves the national team, she said, she may pursue a master's degree in physical therapy or play in the National Professional Volleyball Association, a league currently under construction.

"I never thought I would still be playing volleyball at my age," Endicott said. "For so long, my career has been volleyball, and I have enjoyed it very much. Everything has been worth it."

Pettit said the young Huskers, many of whom grew up idolizing the U.S. National Team players, will benefit from experiencing worldclass volleyball.

U.S. Coach Terry Liskevych has announced he will retire in December. Liskevych has coached the Olympic teams since 1988 and has compiled a 337-280 international

"The issue is not whether you win or lose," Pettit said. "But how could you deny your players an opportunity to play against some of the best players in the world?"

Huskers concentrate on meeting with OU

Reitsma is rolling into Sunday's match after breaking an NU kill record.

The Nebraska volleyball team is trying not to get too caught up in the attention being placed on its match to-night against the U.S. National Team.

That's because the Cornhuskers know they have to turn around and play a conference match with Oklahoma Sunday afternoon.

Sixth-ranked Nebraska, 13-2 overall and 5-0 in the Big 12, plays host to the Sooners, 9-6 and 0-4, at 1:30 p.m. at the NU Coliseum. The match is sold NU enters the match on roll, having won eight straight matches since losing to North Carolina Sept. 13. All but one of those wins have been threegame sweeps.

The Huskers may be without outside hitter Renee Saunders, who injured her left ankle against Colorado Wednesday night.

Before coming to Lincoln, the Sooners have a match at Colorado tonight. In Nebraska's sweep of the Buffaloes Wednesday, Lisa Reitsma shattered her own school record with 29 kills - the most ever in a three-game match.

"Oklahoma always gives us a big challenge, and we have to be up for them," Reitsma said. "This is the part of the Big 12 that I have been looking forward to.'

Next weekend, No. 8 Texas and No. 12 Texas A&M will visit the coliseum where Nebraska has won 22 consecutive matches.

NU Coach Terry Pettit said the Sooners, who have lost four straight matches, are an athletic team that has always given Nebraska problems. The Huskers have won eight straight over OU and lead the all-time series 45-5.

"They are a very good, very physical and very big team," Pettit said.

Young OU team looks for a win same Sooner squad - which will play No. 6 Nebraska Sunday — almost pulled off a huge upset of eighth-ranked Texas, eventually losing in five games.

Then there is the OU team that lost to Kansas State and Kansas last weekend, handing KU its first Big 12 win.

Oklahoma Coach Miles Pabst said he isn't sure which Sooner team will show up Sunday at the NU Coliseum.

"At times," Pabst said, "the lack of experience has hurt us. We're getting better everyday, though.

The Sooners are still searching for their first conference win. OU will be hard pressed to find that win Sunday, Pabst said.

"Nebraska is a very good team," Pabst said. "We always look forward to playing them."

The 9-6 Sooners are led by returning all-conference outside hitter Patrice Arrington, who is averaging 4.79 kills per game.
