All but six counties hail Hagel for U.S. Senate to put signs up and get the vote out. "And you saw the strength of that last night."

John Hibbing, a University of Nebraska-Lincoln political science professor, said Hagel's show of strength was a show of strength for Republican voter registration advantages in Nebraska.

"There was not one corner of the state that turned the tide," he said. "It was a whopping statewide."

Republicans have a 49 to 38 percent advantage in voter registration in Nebraska. Furthermore, 43 percent of Nebraska's Republicans are living in the 3rd congressional district.

Hibbing said if the Republicans can put up a well-financed, articulate, personable candidate in Nebraska, that candidate is going to be hard to beat. But Nebraska's Democrats probably were not rattled by the state GOP's strong showing, he said.

"Democratic candidates in Nebraska are aware that they have an uphill battle to fight."
