Store owner strives for better variety

also brandishes enough influence within the film industry to actually alter material, he said.

"Take 'Showgirls,' for instance — obviously not a great movie, but it was still some director's vision," Stretz said. "The studio had to take back the video and re-edit it just for Blockbuster."

This form of censorship seems dangerous in the hands of such a powerful and prolific corporate entity, he said.

"It infuriates me to think that these blue suits are saying people aren't smart enough to make their own decisions," he said. "It includes pornography, too. I'm not a great advocate of porn, but it does satisfy a need for some people and it's not for me to judge."

Calls to local Blockbuster Video stores were referred to the company's national headquarters, which did not respond.

The intent of the evolving Film Strip Video is to provide an alternative to current corporate video hegemonies.

"The customers here get their videos for 99 cents, or $2.75 with tax for a new release," said Stretz. "I hope people realize that the independent video store owner is an endangered species."

But if you don't rewind, Stretz promises, he won't be the only endangered species, bub.

Rather identifies attacker 11 years after beating

NEW YORK (AP)—The mystery may be solved: Dan Rather has identified the man he says beat him up on the street in 1986 while demanding to know "Kenneth, what is the frequency?"

The CBS anchorman said his assailant was William Tager, now in prison for killing an NBC stagehand outside the "Today" show in 1994.

Tager was convinced the media had him under surveillance and were beaming hostile messages to him, and he demanded that Rather tell him the frequency being used, according to a forensic psychiatrist who examined Tager after the NBC shooting.

It is still unclear why Rather's attacker apparently called him Kenneth.

The turn of events apparently ends a weird mystery, one that inspired a best-selling song by R.E.M., "What's the Frequency, Kenneth," and made the newsman the butt of jokes.

Rather was told by the psychiatrist, Dr. Park Dietz, that Tager was almost certainly his attacker. The anchorman identified Tager from pictures supplied by the New York Daily News.

"There's no doubt in my mind that this is the person," Rather said in Wednesday's News.

Rather was confronted at about 11 p.m. while walking on Park Avenue. When he tried to walk away, he said, he was punched from behind in the jaw and knocked to the ground. The attacker then chased Rather into a building, kicking him several times in the back.

Dietz told the newspaper that Tager admitted attacking Rather after running into the newsman by chance and recognizing him.

Tager, 49, of Charlotte, N.C., pleaded guilty to manslaughter in the slaying of stagehand Campbell Montgomery and was sentenced to 25 years in prison. Tager was trying to take an assault rifle into the street-level "Today" studio at Rockefeller Center when Montgomery pointed him out to police.

The district attorney's office said charges won't be filed in the Rather attack because the statute of limitations has run out. Tager's lawyer, John Esposito, told the News there are still questions as to whether Tager was involved.
