

'Marvin' strong on acting, weak on plot

the actors, however; it's with the script.

When reading playwright Scott McPherson's original play, a sense of finality is missing from the ending. It ends, but there's no sense of closure. It doesn't feel like it's over.

In the film, little is done to repair that incomplete feeling. Without giving the ending away, one is left wondering "But then what?"

McPherson's script is a fine piece of writing, though, with great characterization. Instead of presenting flat and uninteresting people, all of the idiosyncrasies are exposed and given to the viewer, which brings the story to life.

Humor is worked into the story line with an expert hand, but the ending is left too wide open for a comfortable finale.

Despite the well-fashioned dialogue and extremely powerful acting,

The Facts

Film: "Marvin's Room"
Stars: Diane Keaton, Meryl Streep, Leonardo DiCaprio, Robert DeNiro
Director: Jerry Zaks
Rating: PG-13
Grade: B-
Five Words: "Marvin's Room" seems somewhat unfinished

"Marvin's Room" ends hollowly — and that's a tragedy in itself.
