

Beat poet Ginsberg dies

Artist influences generations with sexual, philosophical liberation shoes full of blood on the snowbank docks waiting for a door in the East River to open a room full of steam heat and opium."

"Howl" was dedicated to Carl Solomon, a patient he met during a stay in a psychiatric ward. Forty years later, Ginsberg recited his poetry on MTV for Generation X-ers.

Ginsberg's poetry placed spontaneity over metered verse, frank language over flowery words. His work was often confessional, discussing his homosexuality, his mother's death and his relationships.

"Kaddish," one of his most famous works, was an Oedipal poem dealing with his mother's life and death in a mental hospital. It was written in his Manhattan apartment fueled by a combination of amphetamines and morphine.

His first exposure to the nascent counterculture came when he was a 17-year-old Columbia University freshman. There he met fellow future beatniks Jack Kerouac, William S. Burroughs and Neal Cassady. The group, disillusioned by conventional society, created their own subculture of drugs and hedonism.

"Basically, (they were) just a gang of friends who were very into being literate, and who were interested in art, and loved each other," Ginsberg once said of the Beat Generation's founding fathers. "Some gay, some straight."

Ginsberg was in the gay camp, and became a proponent of homosexual rights—one of many causes the activist poet embraced. In 1960, he went on television to call for the decriminalization of marijuana. He was arrested in 1967 for protesting against the Vietnam War in New York, and was tear-gassed a year later while protesting at the Democratic convention in Chicago.

He claimed that FBI director J. Edgar Hoover had placed him on a "dangerous security list" in 1965, a distinction that led to airport strip searches for several years whenever he returned to the United States.

Ginsberg's first taste of notoriety came after the publication of "Howl" in 1956. Copies of the book were seized by San Francisco police and U.S. Customs officials, and publisher Lawrence Ferlinghetti was charged with publishing an obscene book.

Ferlinghetti was acquitted in 1957, but the case generated enormous publicity for Ginsberg and his work. Ginsberg was suddenly in demand.

Ginsberg remained vital and active well into his 60s, performing in Manhattan nightclubs and doing poetry readings. Last year, he recorded his poem "The Ballad of the Skeletons" with musical backing from Paul McCartney and Philip Glass. Kaye produced the single.

The funeral will be private. In lieu of flowers, donations should be sent to Jewel Heart Buddhist Center in Ann Arbor, Mich. He was survived by his stepmother, Edith Ginsberg of Paterson, N.J.; his brother, Eugene; and several nieces and nephews.

Performances sparkle; second play a challenge

Jude Hickey gave a holistic performance in the role of Tony Aronica. His depiction of Tony's stupidity, lust, arrogance and needs was best seen in his haughty eyes and stance. The levels of emotions through which Hickey transgressed created a riveting character.

The second show of the evening was "Defying Gravity," which was centered on the explosion of the Challenger shuttle.

The Challenger explosion is a tragic and emotionally charged event in the history of America, but the script of "Defying Gravity" made it seem trite and cliched with its contrived and corny symbols. If not for a few key individuals' performances, this play would have bogged down the audience in the banality of life savers and trapeze artists.

Deni Hilger represented Christa McAuliffe in her role as teacher. Her tenderness and enthusiasm complimented her character's oscillation from mother to teacher to astronaut and humanized the Challenger explosion.

Jesse Witkowitz easily alternated between child and adult in her role as Elizabeth, who represented McAuliffe's daughter. At times, however, she struggled with the blandness and banality of the lines, especially in the epiphany at the end of the circus scene.

John Snell was heartwarming in his performance as Monet. His musical voice, child-like enthusiasm and artistic pride created a character who was a father figure and a best friend.

Robie Hayek's performance as C.B. was one of the highlights of the play, adding the compassion and remorse that the script lacked through interpretation.

Heidi Maus also gave a compassionate performance as Donna, the owner of an astronaut-frequented bar. Her nonchalant attitude was wonderfully complimented by her emotional attachment to the astronauts and her pride over having known them.

Finally, the technical aspects of "Defying Gravity," especially Nathan Leach's lighting design, helped to reinforce the space theme.
