

Band to perform rockabilly mix

From Staff Reports

The members of Big Sandy and his Fly-Rite Boys weren't even born when the music they play was being created.

But Big Sandy (his real name is Robert Williams) and his Fly-Rite Boys, who will perform tonight at the Zoo Bar, 136 N. 14th St., are the real thing when it comes to country and western music.

They play a mix of country, hill-billy, rockabilly and western swing circa 1950. The odd thing is the members are all in their 20s and came to the rockabilly scene from early '80s exposure to bands like the Stray Cats.

The Boys' debut album, "Jumping From 6 to 6," was produced by Dave Alvin (formerly of the Blasters).

The show starts about 9 p.m., and there's a $5 cover charge.

Their naivete and energetic presence provided many comic moments, and they played off Hassler and Harrell well.

Michelle Eckley, Daniel Rasmussen, Michael Semrad and Ryan Johnston were funny, yet sad in their roles as troubled teens and bitter children.

Jude Hickey, in the role of Trent, finally helped the audience to understand Paul's charm.

Steven Barth was a bit too shiny and bright in his role as Rick. Though his switch in emotion during his monologue contrasted his previous happiness well, he still needed more variety in his lines to portray Rick's absolute desperation.

Heather Oman gave a satisfactory performance in the role of Elizabeth. Her scenes with Rick and Paul were carefree and loving, but she needed to portray more sorrow after Rick's death.

Theresa Shook's set provided countless dimensions to the play. Her use of bold, primary colors helped to solidify the glittering appearance of the Kittredges' life and Paul's persona, while her dark backdrop and angular lines hinted at the unhappiness present underneath.

"Six Degrees of Separation" continues Tuesday through Saturday at 8 p.m. in the Howell Theatre of the Temple Building.
