A look at crime on campus and in the community

ASSAULT

A police officer was assaulted Saturday night by a man who was later found in possession of methamphetamine and a concealed 9 mm pistol.

The assault was the second case in a week in which an officer tried to arrest someone found in possession of methamphetamine. The recent attack happened on B Street between 12th and 13th streets about 11 p.m.

Lincoln Police Sgt. Ann Heermann said Officer Kathryn Bolkovac had pulled over Jason Douglass, 20, of 2728 E St., for a traffic violation. When Bolkovac was walking him to her cruiser, he pushed her and ran away.

She chased him, and a struggle ensued on the southeast corner of 12th and B streets. During the struggle, Douglass put Bolkovac in a headlock, and Bolkovac bit Douglass to get him to release her.

Douglass released Bolkovac and started to run. She tackled him, and he started kicking her head and shoulders.

Bolkovac finally got him into custody, but not before he broke her collarbone and injured her neck and throat.

Officers later found a fannypack in the front seat of Douglass' car that had a bag of methamphetamine and a 9 mm pistol.

Douglass was booked for first-degree assault of a police officer, possession of a controlled substance, carrying a concealed weapon and driving on a suspended license.

police that three men came into the store on Sunday afternoon. One asked her where the Ace bandages were, and another asked a different employee for help.

The pharmacist said a third man was unattended. When the men left the store without buying anything, she went back to check the shelves. She found that six bottles of Dilaudid were missing.

Dilaudid is a prescription pain medication used for chemotherapy patients. It can cause side effects, including nausea, dizziness, rashes and constipation.

DOMESTIC ASSAULT

An argument between boyfriend and girlfriend ended with the man getting stabbed and police getting two different stories.

Kimberly Giosano was jailed for second-degree assault for allegedly stabbing her boyfriend in the arm with a butcher knife. David Bertram, of 1709 B St., received stitches at Bryan Memorial Hospital for a 2-inch stab wound.

Officers were called to Giosano's house at 3300 S. 11th St. on a domestic disturbance. The stories they got about the fight differ in that Giosano reported being choked by Bertram, then getting scared and grabbing the butcher knife.

Bertram said there was an argument and then Giosano grabbed the knife, Heermann said. She said Bertram reported no choking.

The reports have been referred to the county attorney, Heermann said.

LARCENY

Two men distracted employees of a drug store Sunday afternoon while another man took six bottles of a pain medication that is usually prescribed to chemotherapy patients.

Heermann said the pharmacist at the Family Drug, 6891 A St., told Another bill would put $100 million of the surplus into a fund that would be spent — either on schools or local government — after the lids go into effect, Kilpatrick said.

These lids and property taxes might seem far off for college students because most don't own property, said Bill Lock, an analyst in Warner's office. But because the state's money will most likely be going to help schools and local governments, others in line for the money might have to miss out, he said.

"The university is making a pitch for more state money," Lock said. "They're all competing for the same money, and one could fall by the wayside."

money this year for help with deferred maintenance and renovating buildings such as Richards Hall.

Sen. Dan Lynch of Omaha, chairman of the building maintenance committee, is one who says he would like to see the money going to renovation of state buildings.

Now would be the "best time" to use the money to fix up crumbling buildings in Nebraska, he said.

If schools consolidate, they will not need as much money; and the bill proposing $100 million commitment to schools would be an ongoing cost, he said.

"It seems silly to me," Lynch said. "(Those bills) only happened because we happen to have some extra money lying around."

Correction

A quotation in Monday's Daily Nebraskan was incorrectly attributed to Kerry McDermott on Page 1. Head Cross Country Coach Jay Dirksen said, "(Academics) is why we're here. If we have great teams and win championships, we've really failed if we don't stress the reasons we're here at the university."

"People know the risks and dangers of alcohol and sex. They have to make their own decisions," Goldman said.

The presentation swayed from the serious, using humor to present its concepts.

"We didn't come here to make you sad," Sullivan told the audience. "That would be a bad way to spend the evening. We want to make you laugh."

They discussed everything from condom use to a list Sullivan called "T.J.'s Scale of Drunken Horniness." The scale discussed the four stages of drunkenness and which inhibitions are forgotten in each.

The humor and open approach, the pair said, were more effective.

Blake Wentz, a sophomore accounting major, agreed. Wentz is a member of Theta Xi fraternity.

"When I first heard about it, I thought that I would hear the same old drab and statistics," Wentz said. "But I thought it was really educational. I think a lot of people will remember it."

Dusty Vaughan, a freshman in general studies, agreed and said the performance was informative and entertaining.

"It was a lot better than the other things. I could relate to it better than if a 40-year-old man came and talked to us about it," said Vaughan, also a member of Theta Xi.
