to compete. In the Baker system, one game is played by a team of five bowlers. The first player bowls the first and sixth frames, the second player bowls the second and seventh and so on.

The heart of the Husker team was sophomore Jennifer Daugherty, whose strikes in the fourth and ninth frames of the finals helped rally the team. Daugherty was voted the tournament's most valuable player by the coaches.

"I worked hard to keep the team going. The MVP was a nice reward," Daugherty said.

Senior Brenda Edwards was the tournament scoring leader, averaging a score of 213 over 12 games. Edwards also was a member of the 1995 national championship team.

The keys to the team's success this year have been teamwork and consistency, Straub said. The bowlers made the shots they needed to and consistently pick up their spares, he

"The girls have really good work habits. They are in good shape and they practice well," Straub said. "Their performance shows that."

Conference to address domestic violence, abuse

By Shane Anthony Staff Reporter

Nationally known speakers and local groups will headline a conference addressing sexual violence Friday and Saturday.

Tiffany Mullison, coordinator of training and program development for the Nebraska Domestic Violence Sexual Assault Coalition, said Friday's conference will serve as a training event for professionals in 22 organizations statewide who work with sexual and domestic violence cases. Saturday's session, she said, will be directed toward faith leaders.

The conference is open to the public.

"Doctors are starting to speak out; lawyers are starting to speak out; clergy are starting to speak out; but sexual assault is still the most quiet crime," Mullison said.

Mullison said she hoped everyone can take something back from the conference.

Friday morning, Marianne Winters, executive director of the Massachusetts Coalition Against Sexual Assault, will deliver the keynote address. Winters is expected to discuss attitudes toward sexual assault in society.

After lunch, the conference will break down into smaller groups for two workshop sessions. Winters will present one of the sessions.

High school students from Lincoln Northeast will lead a workshop on peer programs. They will be followed by a group from the Campus Acquaintance Rape Education Program at Hastings College.

Jan Brown, counselor at Lincoln Northeast, said students from both groups will "help professionals in the audience understand that peers report to peers."

Brown said training is crucial for students so they know how to respond as peers. Many students who serve as peer counselors or educators in high school go on to work in similar programs on college campuses, she said.

Another Lincoln group, Men Speak Out Against Violence, also will lead an afternoon workshop Friday. Topher Hansen, director of $10 for Saturday only and $35 for both days.

development and legal counsel at the Lincoln Lancaster Drug Projects Inc., and a founding member of Men Speak Out Against Violence, said the presentation will focus on violence problems in Lincoln and possible solutions. The group has been in Lincoln for about a year.

Richard Boucher, executive director and general counsel of the Nebraska County Attorney's Association, and Mary Gaines, a trial lawyer for Boucher's firm, will speak on legal issues in relation to sexual assault.

Boucher said he will speak on workplace violence and pursuing civil damages in addition to pressing criminal charges. Gaines will speak on more traditional forms of cases such as sexual harassment and employment discrimination.

"Civil and criminal law can work together," Boucher said. He said his message focuses on 'rounding out the justice system.'

Ann Hoschler, director of Team Counseling Services in Omaha and a training specialist for the Nebraska Domestic Violence Sexual Assault Coalition, and Susan Michalski, Medical Consultant for Team Counseling Services, will present a program on raising community consciousness on sexual assault issues.

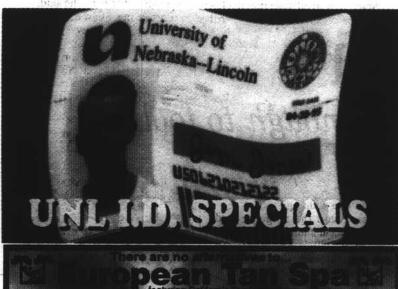

The conference will close on Saturday with an address by Rev. Thelma Burgonio-Watson of the Center for Prevention of Sexual and Domestic Violence in Seattle. Burgonio-Watson was the first Filipina to be ordained as a minister in the Presbyterian Church in the United States. She is now the chairwoman of the National Asian Presbyterian Council of the Presbyterian Church.

Burgonio-Watson will speak on the connections between sexual assault and other forms of violence and how to support programs working to end sexual violence.

The conference will be in the Continuing Education building at 33rd and Holdrege streets.

Participants can register on the site, but should call the Nebraska Domestic Violence Sexual Assault Coalition first to select the workshops they wish to attend.

Costs for the event will be $30 for Friday only,

Former Husker assaulted, then arrested for resistance

From Staff Reports

A former Husker was assaulted, then arrested when he refused to speak with officers Sunday night.

Clinton Childs, a former running back for the Huskers who finished his football career in 1995, and Mary M. Smith, 45, got into a verbal confrontation in the hallway of Smith's apartment building at 2380 N. 44th St., according to police reports.

Sgt. Ann Heermann said Smith then slapped Childs, who responded by spitting on Smith. Childs, 22, of 142 N. 32nd St., told police that the woman started to walk away, but then turned and punched him in the head with a closed fist.

Heermann said officers had been called to the apartment building by several people reporting a disturbance. Smith's 25-year-old daughter told police that she was having a party.

When officers tried to sort matters out, Childs was uncooperative, Heermann said. Officers told him several times to stop, but Childs tried to walk away, she said. Officers had to detain him physically and he resisted, she said.

Childs was arrested and booked for failing to comply with a lawful order and resisting arrest. Smith was cited for assault.
