Shakur's mother sues record company

SHAKUR from page 12

5 million copes were sold.

Shakur died with little more than $150,000 yet Death Row reaped more than $100 million from his music, Fischbein said.

"He was paid less than a million dollars as far as we can see," Fischbein said. "They've never opened the books so that we can see."

The company wrongly billed Shakur's account for other expenses in a "pattern of fraud and deception involving millions of dollars," Fischbein said.

Named in the lawsuit were Death Row and its imprisoned president,

"He was paid less than a million dollars as far as we can see. They've never opened the books so that we can see."

RICHARD FISCHBEIN
Shakur family attorney

Marion "Suge" Knight, who is serving a nine-year term for violating probation from a 1992 assault.

Two lawyers for Death Row, Ed Corey and David Kenner, did not return phone calls Saturday. But Kenner, who's also named in the lawsuit, on Friday denied any wrongdoing or mismanagement.

Citing the handwritten contract, Death Row claims Shakur's unreleased recordings are its property. The company also is seeking 20 percent of Shakur's earnings over the last 18 months as a management fee.
