

Senate panel supports more stringent ratings

broadcasters to do what Congress envisioned ... empower parents to protect their children from harmful television programming," said the committee's chairman, Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., who had voted against an earlier version of the bill.

Existing ratings use designations from "TV-G," programs suitable for all ages, to "TV-MA," for mature audiences only. Most shows have been rated "TV-PG," parental supervision suggested.

Though critics also have complained the existing ratings don't provide adequate information about sexual and language content, Hollings' proposal deals only with violence.

The broadcasting and cable industries oppose the bill, saying it is unconstitutional. The best way to handle ratings is voluntarily, they said.

Supporters point out the Supreme Court has upheld government limits on when indecent shows may be aired on TV and radio stations. Those limits were designed to protect children.

The House bill is not likely to be voted on by the telecommunications subcommittee any time soon.

"We got a ways to go," conceded David Moulton, aide to the bill's author, Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass. The panel will hold a TV ratings hearing in Peoria, Ill., May 19.

Hollings' bill would require broadcasters and most cable channels to either provide more detailed information about shows' violent content or air those shows only when children are not likely to be viewing.

Premium cable channels such as HBO and Showtime and pay-per-view programs are not covered by the bill on the grounds people expressly choose to have them enter their homes. Regulating them would pose constitutional problems, Hollings' aides explained.

The FCC is reviewing the TV industry's voluntary ratings system and will hold a hearing June 4. If the FCC finds the system unsuitable, it can move to appoint an independent advisory board to create a new system.

'Amy' atypical love story

struggles to grow, they both have issues they need to deal with—Alyssa's struggle with her sexuality and "betrayal" to her lesbian friends, and Holden's strained friendship with Banky.

This is the third in Kevin Smith's "New Jersey Trilogy," following the Cannes and Sundance Film Festival award-winner "Clerks" and 1995's "Mallrats." Affleck, Adams and Lee all appeared in "Mallrats," and, of course, the first two films' Silent Bob (Smith) and Jay (Jason Mewes) make appearances.

This movie is so refreshing—it's raw and painfully honest and it takes an earnest look at finding the "right person" in contemporary society.

There's plenty of "two-guys-hangin'-out" raunchy humor and sharp-as-a-knife dialogue, skewed takes on popular culture.

"Clerks" gained tremendous independent success and cult status, but "Mallrats" wasn't as well-received by critics. They say the third time's the charm—it's safe to say Smith has a hit with "Chasing Amy."

You say you can ride?

Prove it.
