Pro leagues consider DeForge

worried about getting the 12th-ranked Huskers back to the NCAA Tournament in March than she was about signing a professional contract. "I do think about furthering my career," she said, "but right now I'm not really trying to get caught up in it. "Maybe toward the end of the season I might concentrate on looking toward the future more."
Gibson said the Husker coaching staff believes DeForge will have a lot to think about as the season winds down. "We think Anna DeForge has a legit chance of going to the ABL, or the WNBA," she said. "Our biggest problem is going to be deciding which league she wants to play in, which is a nice problem to have."

Both of the year-old women's professional leagues have allowed female athletes in all sports to dream a little more about one day becoming a pro athlete. "It's more realistic now than it ever has been," Gibson said of women wanting to move on to the pro ranks. "I think little girls are really going to want to grow up and play basketball because it's here professionally."
It's important, Gibson added, that people realize both leagues, especially the WNBA with its television contract and the help of the NBA, are not just a passing fancy. "It's really going to get strong, and I don't think it will die out," Gibson said. "I think it's here to stay, for the first time in a long time."

DeForge said she was encouraged by the success of the two leagues and wouldn't have any trouble deciding whether or not to go pro when the time comes. "Now there is a better future out there for a lot of athletes," she said. "If I am fortunate enough to have a chance to go to the next level, then yeah, I'm going to take it."

Huskers find hot shooting touch

we scored," Nee said. "When they went zone, we scored."
Two players who particularly struggled during the shooting slump were junior Tyronn Lue and sophomore Cookie Belcher. The two guards from Mexico, Mo., shot a combined 29 percent in the three games before the Ameritas Classic.
In the Ameritas, however, both Lue and Belcher put on a performance good enough to place them on the all-tournament team. Against UNC-Wilmington, Lue scored 27 points, shooting 12-for-13 from the field. Belcher played his best game of the season so far, scoring 20 points against the Seahawks.

The next night, Lue and Belcher each scored 13 points as seven players scored in double figures against Grambling. Lue said that when other players score, it helps take some stress off of his game. "The last couple of games I was trying to force things," Lue said. "If the guys can step up and get things done it takes some pressure off of me. Then we have a little fun."
The Huskers are hoping to keep having fun and keep the hot shooting touch. NU plays in-state rival Creighton on Wednesday, with Minnesota and Virginia on the horizon. "As long as we keep moving without the ball and setting screens," Lue said, "we can get a lot of good shots."

Nothing Lasts Forever

You've been working on that paper for the past 2 weeks. You sit down to use the computer and insert your floppy disk. And the computer kindly informs you that it cannot read your disk.

It seems like disks all decide to die during Dead Week. It may seem like a time of mourning, but you don't have to go through the pain of losing a floppy disk.

Save important information on multiple disks so you have a backup. A box of floppy disks costs only a few dollars at UNL's Computer Shop. Isn't your term paper, not to mention your grade, worth that much?

If you are having problems with your disk, bring the disk to one of these locations:

- Selleck Computer Lab (basement of Selleck Quadrangle)
- Sandoz Computer Lab (Sandoz First Floor)
- Help Desk (501 Building, Room 105)

Information Services will try to resurrect your information.

The death of a disk is painful, but it is also avoidable.
