

Ruwe to make last efforts in February government this semester," Ruwe said. "It has given many, many new and older students an opportunity in which they can get involved, and also an opportunity to find out more about other organizations."

Other goals ASUN members said they met this semester include:

■ Committee for Fees Allocation Chairman Kendall Swenson said he tried to increase awareness of his subcommittee's purpose by visiting student organizations. He said he also tried to gather student input into the fees allocation process; although he said students would have more chance to express their opinions in January when his committee began making its budget.

Academic Committee Chairman Erik Hoegemeyer said his committee's main project this semester dealt with academic advising.

He said letters were sent to every college inquiring about their academic advising policies. The Academic Committee, along with SIT, surveyed advisory boards of the colleges that have one, and students about their college's advising policies.

Hoegemeyer said the committee would analyze the survey data and present the results to the university community soon after winter semester begins.

"We want to focus on what is positive, and if there are points where students have concerns, we want to work on them," Hoegemeyer said. Ruwe said he also would push for the implementation a universitywide teaching evaluation next semester.

■ Campus Life Committee member Adam Anderson said his committee would finish its proposal for a parking education class next semester. The class would allow students to pay a small fee to take a class in place of paying their entire parking ticket.

Anderson said the committee met with the Parking Advisory Board and

"If ... students have concerns, we want to work on them."

Parking Services Director Tad McDowell to discuss the plan. The parking board and McDowell were concerned with how the class would affect their revenue, Anderson said, which caused his committee to re-examine its plan, do more research, and draft a new proposal, which the board will review next semester.

■ Government Liaison Committee Chairman John Wiechmann said he would continue to press the Mayor Mike Johanns' office for action on promised changes for "dangerous" crosswalks.

Flashing yellow lights are scheduled to be installed at the crosswalk in front of the Campus Recreation Center and also in front of Henzlik Hall.

He said his committee would continue research on the Lincoln city ordinance that forbids more than three people living together in one house. Wiechmann said he hoped to have both the stoplights and the ordinance projects completed by February.

Ruwe said February was next semester's only full month his administration had to accomplish the rest of their goals.

He said with winter break cutting into January and ASUN elections in March, a "limited amount of stuff could get done."

However, Ruwe said senators would continue their involvement "outside (ASUN's) office walls."

"We really want to make sure to keep our ears open and fairly and accurately represent the students."
