certain people, and you sometimes don't communicate very well. With others, you speak and communicate well."

"Out on a Whim" is a bit unusual for a jazz album, as it features mostly original compositions by Oxman and his sidemen. Most jazz releases feature several jazz standards.

But "Out on a Whim" features 10 songs written by musicians who perform on the album.

One track, "The Tree Has Fallen (But The Roots Will Live Forever)," was written by White for his father, Grady White Sr. The song was composed in February 1996, the month White's father died.

"Keith wanted to do something different; create his own identity, his own sound," White said. "He also wanted to expose our compositional skills and play more original music instead of typical jazz standards."

White said he looks forward to his March recital. He will perform double duty, playing three classical pieces and several jazz tunes.

"As well as playing three pieces that I really love, it's an opportunity for me to be reunited with some of the best jazz musicians I've ever played with," White said.

White said he has enjoyed his experience so far at UNL.

"I've felt pretty much at home here in Lincoln," he said. "The students have been outstanding. Everything's been great, and I expect it to continue that way, actually."

Keith Oxman
"Out on a Whim"
Capri Records
Grade: A-

"Out on a Whim" is an excellent jazz album, which represents post-bop, traditional, third-stream and more experimental forms of jazz, all in the album's 70 minutes.

"Whim" is the third release from Capri Records of tenor saxophonist Keith Oxman's quintet (which features University of Nebraska-Lincoln assistant professor of trumpet Darryl White).

One unusual thing about this album is that there are only two standards. The first, "Strike up the Band," was written by George Gershwin and is often played by concert bands as an opening fanfare. Oxman plays this tune only with drummer Mike Whited. This novel approach frees Oxman to play an inspired, technical improvisation that quotes from jazz saxophonist Charlie Parker, among others. Although short, this is the best straight-ahead tune on the album.

The other standard, "In a Sentimental Mood" by bandleader Duke Ellington, was too reverent. On it, Oxman plays so romantically that one can see the champagne, roses and Ghirardelli chocolates.

However, all is forgiven once you get to the best track on the album, Darryl White's own "The Tree Has Fallen (But The Roots Will Live Forever)."

This tune fits into third-stream jazz, a la the Miles Davis/Gil Evans "Sketches of Spain." But that comparison fails to convey the power and brilliance of White's composition. Quite simply, "The Tree Has Fallen" is a masterful jazz composition, worthy of inclusion by any jazz great.

Other standouts on the album include "In These Perilous Times," written by Andy Weyl; "Red Alert," written by Oxman; and "Out on a Whim," written by Mike Whited.

Although all of the musicians on this release are good, Oxman and White in particular show off their phenomenal expressive, technical and dynamic ranges. If there is any justice in this world, both will become stars in the jazz firmament.
