

Omahans prepare for 'psychobilly' invasion

The band's live performances are an experience in themselves — something you have to see for yourself to believe.

According to the Reverend's record label, Interscope, the band is currently touring in support of its new album, titled "Spaceheater." The album is due out in stores March 24, and is said to include 16 new songs.

The Reverend Horton Heat is all about showbiz, and he said that some of the artists he has been seeing recently are doing the squirreliest and stupidest things.

"It doesn't matter what guitar you play, it's how you play it. It's what comes out of your heart," he once said. "Being able to haul ass all over the fretboard doesn't mean anything if the music's no good."

will range from Ludwig van Beethoven's "Fifth Symphony" to pieces composed by Aaron Copland.

"Audiences have shorter attention spans these days," Kolb said, "so I try to keep recitals interesting and talk a lot to my people."

Kolb, who performs between 50 and 60 recitals a year, spoke and performed to students in the School of Music Thursday afternoon. He was brought to the university by Paul Barnes, an assistant professor of piano at UNL. Barnes met Kolb in Ontario last year.

Kolb has appeared with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra and Hamburg Philharmonic, among other notable ensembles.

His performance at Carnegie Hall was hailed by The New York Times as "a piano recital program with a difference."

On Saturday, Kolb will lead a "Music and Money" workshop from 9 a.m. to noon at Southeast Community College. The seminar will focus on how musicians can be successful and find a way to make money with their talents.

The Home Concert Association is sponsoring the event. Founder and artistic adviser Ken Hauptman said this event is a must-see for all students pursuing a career in music.

"Justin has a wealth of experience because he's been there," Hauptman said. "He goes through the entire process of building a music career, step by step."

Hauptman said Kolb will cover everything at the seminar

"I basically show kids what they can do with a music degree on Monday mornings."

from budgeting to publicity, as well as other topics that every up-and-coming musician needs to know to make it in "the business."

"The world is different from when I was a kid. All you had to do back then was practice hard and audition to an agent," Kolb said. "Now, you've got to be a businessman or entrepreneur, too. I basically show kids what they can do on Monday mornings with a music degree."

Kolb is frequently engaged by schools on all levels to present his lectures, but he says his favorite audiences are college students. He is also the former CEO of his own cellular phone company, and has extensive experience in the business world.

For more information, or to register for Kolb's session, contact Southeast Community College at (402) 437-2700.
