Quiet Riot, other 80s 'hairdo' bands to play at Guitars

By JASON HARDY
Assignment Reporter

In 1983, America felt the "Noize" of heavy metal for the first time in massive arenas packed with hairdos and cuf-up sweatshirts that read "Quiet Riot."

This weekend, Lincoln will have its chance to get checked out with a clean bill of "metal health."

Heavy metal pioneers Quiet Riot will be at Guitars and Cadillacs, 5400 O St., Sunday to perform the hits that made them famous throughout the '80s.

But the metal mayhem doesn't stop there. Art Rigg, general manager at Guitars and Cadillacs, said Cinderella was booked for an upcoming show, and he planned on getting more '80s hairdo, metal bands in the future.

"There's a real demand for it," Rigg said.

He said the demand was there because people wanted to see something different.

"Country was a big trend for a long time, and it pretty much dropped off and people are looking for something different," Rigg said. "People are like 'Yeah, I remember that song.' It's fun to go back, I that you saw in an arena years ago in a club now," Coutts said. "There's nothing new and exciting — it's old and exciting."

He said the trend is spreading fast.

"('80s bands) are all jumping on the wagon now. They're not going to be playing clubs much longer," Coutts said. "You're going to see them in bigger environments."

While Coutts agreed there was a kitsch factor in seeing old metal bands, he said the music was ultimately what brought people to see the bands.

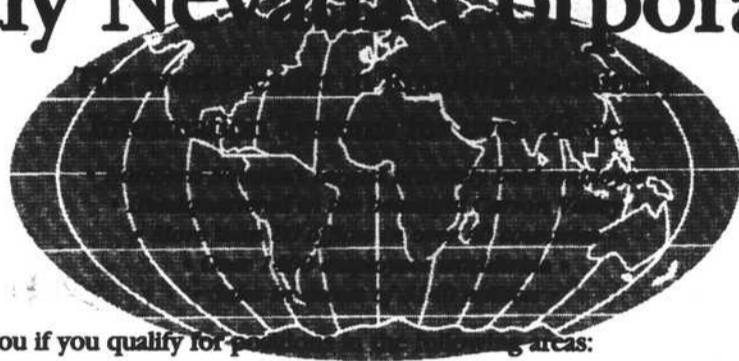

"There is a little funny quality to some of it, but I know myself and a lot of people go to these shows to hear the songs," Coutts said.

Funny or not, Rigg said he was sure Quiet Riot, which has all its original members back, would be loud and rocking.

"They've never played here with all the original members, so I think it'll be a really good time," Rigg said. "I'm sure it's gonna' be huge."

Tickets for the show are $10 in advance and $12 the day of the show. For more information call Guitars and Cadillacs at (402) 464-1100.
