

Nobel winner to speak at Brace Lab

Nobel Prize-winning physicist Norman F. Ramsey will speak at UNL today.

Ramsey, a Harvard University professor and 1989 winner of the Nobel Prize for physics, will speak on "Exploring the Universe with Atomic Clocks" at 4 p.m. in 211 Brace Laboratory. The lecture is free and open to the public.

Ramsey is a Higgins professor of physics at Harvard. Higgins' other honors include the Einstein Prize for Laser Science, the National Medal of Science and Erice Science for Peace Prize.

High-precision atomic clocks will be the focus of his lecture. Among other things, Higgins will describe how atomic clocks are used in the study of neutron stars, pulsars and the movement of tectonic plates. He also will explain how gravity affects light.

The visit is supported in part by the University of Nebraska-Lincoln Research Council.

Dance proceeds will benefit injured high school student

From Staff Reports

Grab your dancin' boots and your hat - it's time to show support and strut your stuff tonight at Burr Residence Hall's second annual Bull Fry Dance.

Featuring "Full Choke," a country music band, students, faculty members and staff are encouraged to "go nuts" at the Pla-Mor Ballroom, 6600 West O Street, 8 p.m. to 12:30 a.m.

Kelly Meyer, Burr Hall vice president and senior diversified agriculture major, said the dance is a benefit for Adrian Regier, the cousin of two Burr Hall residents.

Regier, a Wheatland High School student, became comatose after a football injury in September.

Meyer said tickets are $5 at the door, and all ages are welcome. No alcohol will be served.

"Yes, we will probably lack the audience that usually goes out on a Thursday night," Meyer said. "However, we don't want to be associated with alcohol during this event."

Adam Walker, host of KZKX-FM (96.9) Club Kix, will be broadcasting live.

"We are rallying as much support for Adrian and the Bull Fry on Saturday," he said.

Meyer said people will be able to buy T-shirts ($10) and tickets for Saturday's Bull Fry ($5) at the dance.

All ticket and T-shirt sales, as well as donations, will go to Adrian Regier and his family to help defray medical costs.

For more information contact Philip Erdman, Burr Hall president, (402) 436-0851.

CORRECTION

A story in Wednesday's Daily Nebraskan incorrectly stated that the University of Nebraska at Omaha is starting an architectural engineering program. The program is being offered on UNO's campus through the University of Nebraska-Lincoln's College of Engineering and Technology. However, no architectural engineering courses currently are being offered at UNL.
