

Questions remain in stabbings

when police believe the stabbings happened.

Police are investigating the deaths as homicides, but they would not comment on the circumstances surrounding the deaths, said Lincoln Police Capt. Gary Engel.

Police are still awaiting autopsy results, which are expected early this week.

The investigation has been slowed by a language barrier, Engel said. The family of the victims is Vietnamese.

Tuesday police were called to the home in the 3500 block of North Fourth Street Court for a domestic dispute between Bui and Nguyen.

Bui lived with her parents and ran a small beauty salon in north-central Lincoln. Nguyen moved to Lincoln from Vietnam a few weeks ago.

Lancaster County Attorney Gary Lacey said it appeared to be an unfortunate dispute between marital partners.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

UNITE: College success is possible

By LINDSAY YOUNG
Assignment Reporter

American Indian students from Nebraska last weekend got a large dose of UNL life in a short period of time.

Native American Recruitment Day, held Friday and Saturday at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln, treated about 30 high school students to a combination of campus tours, university speakers, classroom visits and Husker football.

The University of Nebraska Intertribal Exchange members sponsored the weekend as an opportunity to share their college success stories with the high school students.

"Native students, especially the ones on the reservation, need to be told they can go to college and be successful," UNITE President D.C. McCauley III said.

And because the day was one of many this year that were student-run, it may have been more successful, said Peg Blake, director of admissions.

"We've had a lot of success with student projects like that," she said. Friday, the students heard from various university offices such as housing and Admissions, took a tour of the City and East campuses and attended UNITE's banquet.

Some of the high school students attended the football national championship celebration or went to the African People's Union dance, McCauley said.

A student panel was held earlier in the day, giving high school students an opportunity to ask questions of UNL students.

At Friday's banquet, the UNITE Member of the Year Award was given to freshman Misty Thomas. An award also was given to Yolanda Few Tails-Castellanos for her work with the UNITE powwow in the fall.
