

Brooklyn's Pee Shy leaking with intelligent, poetic lyrics

Pee Shy takes the same simple approach to making music as Wheeler does to facing her lavatory demons.

The band combines simple pop elements with sharp-tongued, poetic lyrics to create a catchy, melodic package ripe with lyrical intelligence. The echoing vocals by Jenny Juristo and Wheeler give the group a comforting quality.

Wheeler said the band has always been pretty easy going when it comes to music, mainly because when Pee Shy started, none of its members were very versed in musicianship.

"We were just teaching ourselves to play," Wheeler said. "I think our music has kind of grown at the same rate that our musical talent has.

"The beauty in simplicity is an important part of Pee Shy, and it started out of necessity; but now I keep it there."

While the music off its new album, "Don't get Too Comfortable," is fairly simple, the group's musical talent has grown a lot in its five years together and is represented by the variety of instruments on the album.

Aside from the usual guitar, bass and drums, the band adds moogs, clarinets and accordions to design simple pop songs with many different underlying elements. The end effect is a solid musical mixture of lighthearted melodies and moody undertones.

Add to that the vibrantly descriptive and often cynical lyrics, and the band creates an interesting juxtaposition.

"If the subject matter didn't have the edge or bite to it, it would be too much sweetness," Wheeler said. "I'd feel like I'm going to vomit."

Wheeler said the group's lyrical strength is very much a result of her and Juristo's interest in poetry and spoken word performances. Juristo is a writer, and Wheeler is a national poetry slam champion.

"It's just our backgrounds," Wheeler said. "Jenny and I are both poets, and we were doing spoken word stuff long before we were playing music."

She said she feels a strong tie to her lyrics because writing was something she always did, and - in the band's beginning - the lyrics were the group's most powerful element.

"We were all just learning the instruments when we started the band so we kind of held on to our words and our lyrics as the one thing we could do," Wheeler said.

With the lyrics from the first single, "Mister Whisper," Pee Shy joins the illustrious group of rock musicians, Pavement and Bruce Springsteen to name a few, who've mentioned or written songs about Nebraska.

Pee Shy's song is about a phone conversation between Wheeler and her boyfriend, who was on tour with his band in Nebraska and called to break up.

Wheeler said she is anxious to finally see the state.

"I'm looking forward to it since I've been singing about it for so long."

Sunday's show starts at 10 p.m. and has a $3 cover charge.
