ASUN stalls on proposed bylaw regulating appointments to UPC

By Ieva Augstums
Staff writer

ASUN

The University of Nebraska-Lincoln student senate postponed a bylaw change Wednesday that would return control over officer appointments to the University Program Council.

"We are formulating what looks to be a fairly good plan and compromise," said Paul Schreier, Committee for Fees Allocation chairman. "We are amending the bylaw so it will cover all bases and work for this year and upcoming years."

In 1994, the Association of Students of the University of Nebraska passed a bylaw empowering it to select the council's executive board members and event directors.

The bylaw change came into effect after a five-month personal and structural battle between the two student groups. It created a selection committee made up of three members from each organization who would choose UPC executive members.

The new bylaw change would return the process of selecting UPC executive members to present council members.

The senate voted to postpone the new bylaw change definitely last week to give the ASUN and council members more time to research the 1994 dispute.

The additional week postponement was welcomed by senate members.

"Additional time was needed on this bylaw," Jeff Woodford, a senator for graduate students, said. "I hope the additional week is enough time."

Jamie Gaffney, University Program Council president, said UPC, CFA and Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs James Griesen are brainstorming other options to create the UPC executive selection committee.

One option is to have non-affiliated ASUN or UPC students help with the selection process, Gaffney said. Those non-affiliated students, which could include current ASUN members, would have to apply and be appointed by an ASUN board.

"We just want to be equal," Gaffney said. "Other student funding organizations, like the Daily Nebraskan, do have outside members help with selecting executive positions. We should have the right, too."

Schreier said it is CFA's duty to make sure all student organizations are properly funded and have the right to direct their funds in a manner they choose. This includes choosing an executive board to make funding decisions, he said.

"(CFA) believes direct control of any organization is wrong," Schreier said. "That is not how student government works."

Gaffney said she is pleased a compromise between the two student organizations is in the works.

"This is something that really means a lot to UPC," Gaffney said. "To have the ASUN support us would be wonderful."

Schreier and Gaffney will propose an amendment to the bylaw change to ASUN on Wednesday.
