space with her. Sadle chose three of her friends: Carol Sexton, Steve Settle and John Gillett.

Sexton, a resident of Scottsbluff, will exhibit a collection of pastels of the landscapes of Nebraska. Sexton's work usually features sweeping fields and distant hills, Meysenburg said.

Steve Settle, a bronze sculptor, will exhibit a number of sculptures, including a life-size bronze of a child.

Finally, John Gillett will exhibit a collection of pottery that abandons traditional vase forms for more sculptural shapes.

The Main Gallery will feature the talents of two Noyes artists, Olive Bishop and Bonnie Goochey.

Bishop, a new addition to the Noyes' list of artists, will present a collection of scratch-board works. Scratch-board artists begin with a board painted black and then use a knife to scratch out their designs.

Meysenburg described Bishop's style as nature-oriented, focusing on farm scenes of rabbits, owls and trees.

Goochey, a silversmith, will present a collection of jewelry. Goochey usually works with abstract shapes, incorporating stones and different kinds of metal wire into her bracelets and necklaces.

Handmade one-of-a-kind jewelry could make this Valentine's Day more than just chocolates and flowers.

Omaha writer's wicked humor brings Hollywood attention

Dooling spent four years working at the largest law firm in St. Louis, Bryan Cave, before moving back to Omaha with his wife and four children.

Dooling said he and his family moved back to Omaha because of the quality education schools in the area offer.

With such a variety of work experiences, one may ask why Dooling decided to devote himself to writing.

"I just like to write, the way some people like to bank or teach," Dooling said.
