Train should offer more

ing I had been seated in the "Maple Creek." This is the only car where a group of actors, put together by Holly Nielson, performs a murder mystery. The guests interact with the actors and take notes to decide "whodunit."

Nielson said every show is different, and that it's "in-your-face drama."

One couple, Myla and Tim Jones, were chosen to be actors from the audience. When asked what the best part of the evening was so far, Myla Jones replied, "I like the history and meeting people. It's a great atmosphere."

They obviously had a different experience than I did. Although it was interesting to ride on an old train and feel glamorous for 10 minutes, I felt as if I was sold short.

Because I rode on the dinner car and not the murder mystery car, my evening consisted of a five-course dinner, a quick tour of the other cars (which made me feel a pang of jealousy) and clips of old '40s movies toward the end of the trip.

The meal might have been enough to keep us occupied, except for two things. One, you could get the same entree on a United Airlines flight and two, the trip was 3½ hours long.

Perhaps it's because I'm a college kid, and $50 is a lot of money to me. Or maybe it's that I don't get that sentimental feeling like the people who lived through the period did. It did seem as if the other people on my car, who were all older, enjoyed themselves. I did catch a few people sneaking peeks at their watches, though.

I think the important part is to catch a show there. In the future, the dinner train will be presenting Oktoberfest, a Halloween show, and USO shows. The train is also available for charter, and Eveland said he was "open to many concepts and ideas" people have for parties.

"It's a great atmosphere."

dinner train patron

It's not that a good time can't be had on the train, but bringing a good conversationalist is a must and first dates are not advised. The drive there is pleasant, and it was nice to get out of town and see something different.

However, if the train were more authentic, the wait staff were in costume, the food were high quality and if each car had entertainment, a better time would be had for the price.

I think of it this way: As of right now, the dinner train is like communism - it's better in theory than in practice.
