Event encourages recycling, education

From staff reports

ASUN senators are urging students to help save the world today by taking part in NU Recycles Day.

Campus Life Committee Chairman Ryan Comes said the Association of Students of the University of Nebraska helped sponsor the day to educate students, staff and faculty about the importance of recycling.

Events encouraging recycling will be held at the Nebraska Union from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

ASUN, the Environmental Resource Center and the Division of University Services Recycling Department will have booths and prizes at the union.

Comes said volunteers will be giving out recycling information, magnets, buttons and flower seeds.

There will also be cards for people to sign saying they will recycle.

"We want to bring awareness to people about the importance of recycling."

The University of Nebraska-Lincoln is participating in a contest with Kansas State University and Kansas University to see who can collect the most aluminum cans next week.

Comes said containers for aluminum cans will be available in the residence halls and greek houses.

"We want to bring awareness to people about the importance of recycling," Comes said.

Circle ties students, NU alumni

BY JILL ZEMAN
 Staff writer

Women representing the diverse areas of politics, business and the arts converged at UNL last week, all having at least one commonality: They are alumni of University of Nebraska-Lincoln and members of the Cather Circle.

The Cather Circle, named for Nebraska author Willa Cather, is a women's alumni mentoring group designed to benefit both students and alumni, said Shelley Zaborowski, director of student programs for the Nebraska Alumni Association.

More than 90 women alumni and students participated in the inaugural meeting held at Wick Alumni Center last Thursday and Friday, Zaborowski said.

Activities included leadership assessments, panel discussions and speakers such as Sarah Weddington, attorney in the Roe vs. Wade case, and Susan Rosowski, Adele Hall Distinguished Professor of English at UNL.

Participants also had the opportunity to attend the opening of the opera "O Pioneers!" held at Kimball Hall Friday night.

Plans for Cather Circle began in the summer of 1998, and organization for the meeting started last April, Zaborowski said.

Currently, the Cather Circle has 71 members, who were chosen through informal research and recommendations from staff, Zaborowski said.

Cather Circle organizers plan to induct 30 new women each year. The new members will be chosen by the current members, Zaborowski said.

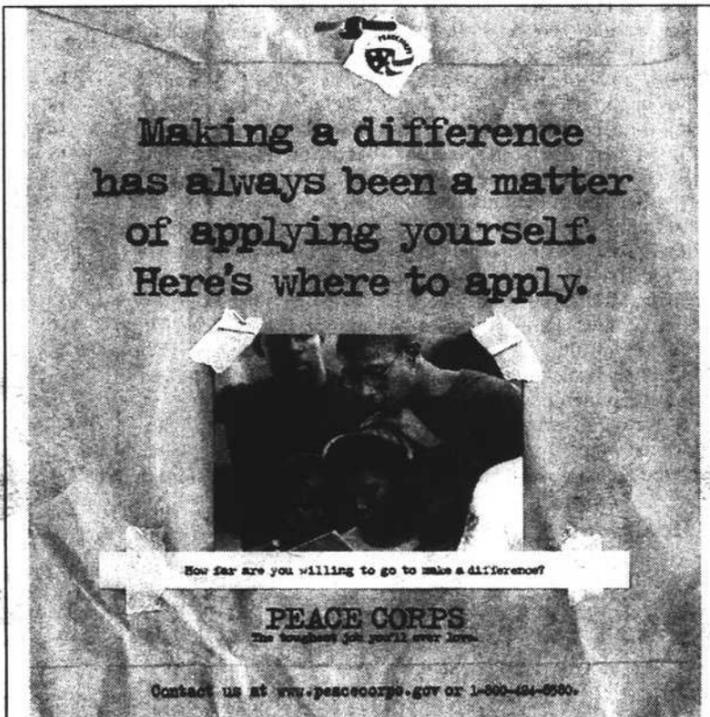

UNL students applied to participate in this year's mentoring program.

"We hope to provide an opportunity for professional women to network with each other and for students to learn from the alumni," Zaborowski said.

Alumni also gained insight after interacting with the students and graduates, said Nancy Rapoport, Dean of the College of Law.

Rapoport is a member of the executive committee of Cather Circle and helped organize a panel for the discussion, "What We Wished We'd Known."

"Nebraska has produced some remarkable women alumni and continues to produce remarkable women," she said.

RHA debates surplus use

From staff reports

How to spend $600 on 4,500 people in four weeks was the big question Sunday night at the UNL Residence Hall Association meeting.

RHA brainstormed Sunday night how to use the $600 remaining in the fall semester programming budget.

Ideas included supplying the halls with hot water and tea bags during dead week, putting candy in mailboxes and saving the money for next semester.

RHA also considered letting Food Services use the money to provide midnight breakfasts during Dead Week. Food Services may not be providing midnight breakfasts this year, said Jadd Stevens, RHA president.

Mike Butterfield, RHA speaker, emphasized RHA's role in making residence halls an attractive living option for students.

RHA also approved the Neihardt Council Constitution, and it debated and tabled an amendment to the RHA bylaws defining "majority."
