

ABOVE: EVERY YEAR it rains, and every year the "mud people" are born. Somewhere in the 575-acre campgrounds a mud-slide is formed; this year about 200 people participated, and took a bath in the lake afterwards.

RIGHT: DETER, LEAD singer of the Juliana Theory, lets out a scream in the middle of their set on the Decapolis Magazine stage. Two hundred bands played on nine different stages over the 5 days of the festival. The styles of music ranged from hard core and metal to emo and indie/folk rock.

TOP: CORNERSTONE bills itself as a different kind of festival, including an attitude open-armed acceptance. In the approximately 30,000 people who attended, a plethora of hair colors and styles, tattoos, and the like made an appearance.
ABOVE: A MURAL IS SET UP each year for festival-goers to paint. Cornerstone isn't only about music; the festival also features an art exhibit, workshops, speakers, sports, kids' activities, and as it is usually over the Fourth of July, a fireworks show.
