Huskers' late scoring barrage proves too much for Cyclones

164 yards and rushing for 138. It was the seventh time in Crouch's career that he went over the 100-yard rushing mark, but the first time he accounted for more than 300 yards total offense.

Solich was high on Crouch's performance and particularly pleased with the junior quarterback's three for three passing performance in the game's final 30 minutes.

All three of those passes, for 25 yards to Correll Buckhalter, and 20 and 8 yards to Tracey Wistrom, came on the touchdown drive that put NU ahead 28-20.

"Eric gives us that extra dimension to win ballgames," Solich said. "He was extremely sharp throwing the ball in the second half."

Crouch wasn't alone in racking up the yardage. The Husker offense averaged 6.5 yards per play during the game.

"We felt like we could pretty much move the ball at anytime," Crouch said. "That's why we were so frustrated at halftime."

Most of what Crouch and NU did came on the ground.

Dan Alexander almost topped the 100-yard mark in industrious fashion. Alexander ground out 96 yards in 21 carries. Buckhalter also contributed 24 yards on nine carries but was most effective on the scoreboard by tying a career-high three touchdown effort.

"Iowa State is a great team," Buckhalter said. "We came in at halftime knowing that we had two more quarters and we had to play Nebraska football."

After the break, the NU defense got it done as well.

Vanden Bosch keyed a defensive unit, which picked off two passes and limited the Cyclone offense to five of 15 third down conversions. Vanden Bosch recorded four tackles for losses and one sack.

During one sequence, the senior co-captain forced Rosenfels into pitching on an option and then also chased down the pitchman for no gain.

"I've been working to make the big plays in practice," Vanden Bosch said. "As a senior and a captain, I needed to step up and make them today."

Holding the Cyclones to just 13 second-half points was due to a series of adjustments, Bohl said. One of the most important was mental, Bohl said.

"We instilled a sense of confidence and went out and set the tone early in the second half," Bohl said.

It was a tone that left ISU fans with only a moral victory and the goal posts intact.

when ISU was driving against the wind, was called in the second quarter on a fourth-and-five on NU's 24-yard-line.

The option by Cyclone holder Casey Baldwin to the right side was stopped for a two-yard loss and the Huskers took over on downs.

"It looked like a slow-motion option," McCarney said. "It looked better in practice than it did today."

Iowa State's second blunder featured an interception of a Lane Danielson pass by NU's Troy Watchorn. Danielson rolled to the right after receiving a pitch from Rosenfels and threw up a wobbly pass as Chris Kelsay and Randy Stella pressured him.

The turnover followed an 11-play, 70-yard scoring drive for NU, which gave the Huskers a 28-20 lead. NU scored shortly after the pick on a one-yard Correll Buckhalter run and went up 35-20.

Despite the ineffectiveness of some of his calls, McCarney was there to leave everything he had on the field, and Cyclone players were not questioning his decisions after the game.

"I think we just tried to throw everything we had at them today," Rosenfels said. "I don't think we had anymore exotics than normal today."

An emotionally draining defeat might spell doom for any other team, but McCarney and others vowed to keep up the intensity in the next couple of games and for the rest of the season in ISU's quest for a bowl bid.

"We know that one game doesn't make your season," Powers said. "You can play with the best team in the country one week and not be sound against another opponent the next week."

Moses, a senior, said he wouldn't let Nebraska become Iowa State's Kansas State of last year.

"I promise you that this will not happen to this year's ball club," said Moses, who saw his team drop six out of its last seven games last season after losing to the Wildcats. "We got a good team and showed it, but we have to learn how to play third and fourth quarters."

ISU blows chance of a lifetime be right. But the 'Clones reeked back then and have not learned the biggest lesson yet - how to win.

They have learned to compete, judging by their performance last season against the likes of Colorado and Kansas State and their 4-0 record coming into the game this season. Don't be surprised if ISU bounces back and still qualifies for a bowl game - they only need two more wins.

But a bowl is not where the Cyclones and McCarney want to be. They want bigger and better things - things that are achieved by beating teams like the Huskers and the Wildcats of the world.

They have already gained the respect of the state by dominating Iowa in recent years, but they want the respect of a national audience as well.

Some Cyclones believe they got it after hanging with the Huskers for more than three quarters.

They didn't prove anything to all the folks at home in Florida, California and New York. All they see is another 22-point Cyclone whipping.

Those same folks will see the same thing next year and for several years after that. Because you only get some chances once in a lifetime.
