

Prospect touts art's relevance

The second candidate for the Fine and Performing Arts dean position visited Thursday.
BY VERONICA DAEHN

David Orr Belcher is happy with his job as dean of the College of Arts and Letters at Southwest Missouri State University in Springfield, Mo.

But the thought of becoming dean of the University of Nebraska-Lincoln's Hixson-Lied College of Fine and Performing Arts is too exciting to pass up, he told UNL faculty members Thursday.

Belcher is the second candidate to interview for the position of dean of the college.

UNL has been seeking a replacement for former Dean Richard Durst, who left to become dean of the College of Arts and Architecture at Pennsylvania State University in University Park, Pa.

Belcher, who has been at Southwest Missouri State since 1994, said although he was happy in his current job, he wanted to interview at UNL for the challenge.

There are perks that would come along with the position, too, he said.

The College of Fine and Performing Arts was given $18 million last spring by Christina M. Hixson. That money, along with the Research I ranking UNL holds, is attractive, he said. "The opportunity to be at an institution like this one was very intriguing to me," Belcher said.

In his presentation at the Lied Center for Performing Arts on Thursday, Belcher spoke about how important it was to educate people about the relevance of the arts.

"Discussing relevance is uncomfortable, but if we care about students, we have to examine what we do," he said.

Belcher said it was important for faculty members and administrators to concentrate on teaching. They shouldn't be bogged down by meetings and committees.

It also is important to get community members to attend artistic events, he said.

"You have to make people see and understand what you're doing," Belcher said. "It is going to make a difference in time. You'll never have all the money you want, but resources will follow."

Belcher said he spent about 25 percent of his time at Southwest Missouri State fundraising, even though deans were not encouraged to do so.

It is necessary at UNL, too, he said, despite the $18 million gift last spring.

"Yes, $18 million is great," he said, "but it's not that much money when you're talking about becoming a major player in the country's art community."

Walker Kennedy, president of the advisory board of the Nebraska Repertory Theatre, and a member of the search committee that helped select the dean candidates, said it was important for the next dean to help fund-raise.

The dean of Fine and Performing Arts wears two hats, Kennedy said. He is the head of the college's departments, and he needs to have a relationship with places such as the Sheldon Memorial Art Gallery and the Lied Center.

Kennedy said he thought Belcher would be good at that.

"He won't have trouble fund raising," Kennedy said. "He'll do a good job."

Recycling efforts to kick off

While football is played inside the stadium, recycling efforts will be tackled outside.

BY KRISTEN ELIAS

Fans at Memorial Stadium Saturday hope to cheer the Huskers on to victory, but Dale Ekart, the recycling coordinator at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln, hopes fans will cheer for the university's recycling efforts outside the stadium, as well.

UNL, in conjunction with Midland Recycling and the student organization Ecology Now, will kick off the Nov. 15 America Recycles Day on Friday and Saturday.

Information and collection booths will be set outside the stadium where volunteers will educate fans, collect recyclable items and hand out free Pepsi products.

"We thought this would be a great way to expand the celebration. A lot of people are around at the football game ... and we want to reach a lot of people," Ekart said.

Midland Recycling hopes to interest fans through its tailgate party, beginning at 12:30 p.m. at 530 W. P St., where workers will be selling raffle tickets to the Nebraska-Kansas football game.

"Nebraska is a big football state, so we thought we'd try the tailgate idea to bring in more people," said Midland Recycling Administrative Manager Jacques Murrish.

After the game, students, faculty members and Midland Recycling representatives will round up the litter from the stadium. They will sort through it on Sunday.

"We hope to have some results on what they throw away ... what was good and what was bad," Ekart said.

As well as helping with the booths and litter sorting,

Ecology Now will be running an America Recycles Day art show and contest in the Nebraska Union Nov. 13-17, where people can submit sculptures made from recyclable materials. A prize will be given to the winning sculpture.

Anyone can participate by sending an e-mail to samberani@yahoo.com to obtain an entry form.

"We wanted a big visual display to make people think. I don't think people would throw as much away if they thought about it," said Angie Noe, projects coordinator for Ecology Now and a senior environmental studies major.

Although fans on Saturday will be focusing on the Huskers, Ekart hopes to draw their attention to the recycling project.

"We're trying to change people's habits and attitudes. We just want to stir their thoughts, even if they're thinking about the football game."

A wrinkle-free laundry deal

Procter & Gamble will visit residence halls giving away quarters and its new product.

BY GWEN TIETGEN

Students in some residence halls may be crowding into laundry rooms next week to take advantage of Wrinkle-Free Laundry Week.

Representatives from Procter & Gamble Co. will sprinkle laundry rooms at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln with quarters and samples of laundry detergent and fabric softener Sunday through Thursday to promote their new Downy Wrinkle Releaser.

P&G representatives are scheduled to be in Harper-Schramm-Smith, Neihardt, Abel, Sandoz, Selleck and Burr-Fedde laundry rooms from 3 to 9 p.m. during the promotion.

Catherine Falcetti of P&G said the representatives will be available to answer students' questions about how to wash certain items.

"We decided (Downy Wrinkle Releaser) would be a great product for college kids who don't have time to iron," Falcetti said.

Falcetti said she remembered always having wrinkled clothes when she was in college.

"With (Downy Wrinkle Releaser) you just spray it on, tug on the ends of the shirt and smooth the wrinkle out with your hand while your clothes lie on a flat surface or a hanger," Falcetti said.

Downy Wrinkle Releaser

lubricates the fibers of the fabric, breaking hydrogen bonds that stabilize wrinkles, Falcetti said. This allows them to be smoothed away.

Students can win a free case of Downy Wrinkle Releaser by describing, in 50 words or fewer, why they should be the winner. Students can enter online at <http://www.spraytugsmooth.com>.

Michael Hager, UNL associate director of housing administration and information systems, said anytime someone wants to pay for the washing and drying of laundry for residents, "that's fine" with him.

"Colleges are a test market for P&G to see if this is a good marketing strategy for them," Hager said.

P&G representatives have been on the road since September and will have visited 25 colleges by the time they finish.

Some students at UNL liked the idea of a wrinkle releaser, while others saw no need for it.

"If you ever had to iron, you wouldn't have to with (Downy Wrinkle Releaser)," said Bret Glover, a freshman mechanical engineering major.

Kati Howell, a freshman exercise science major, said she wouldn't use a wrinkle releaser because it would take too much time.

"Normally, I fold my clothes right after I dry them, and if they are wrinkled, I don't care."
