best designs, Weiss said. "The big message we wanted to show was kind of a hopeful message and show the kitchen is a welcoming place for people that wanted to go there," said Stork, a junior.

After guests at the kitchen prepared the 160-foot wall for use, students enlarged the design to scale, then drew it on Nov. 7 by using a grid system, Weiss said.

The class worked with Mural Mural Graphics, which helped them with the design; Diamond Vogel paints, which donated the paint; and Carter Lumber, which donated ladders she said.

Weiss said the students did not start painting until before Thanksgiving, but would like to finish the project by the end of

The large mural incorporated the logo of Matt Talbot Kitchen: "Serving the working poor, homeless and hungry, and its message of welcoming

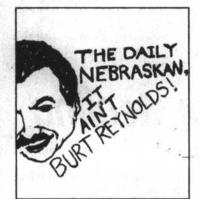

"We wanted to use a lot of different colors and show diversity," Stork said.

Blue said the impact on guests at the kitchen was enor-"It's been a group effort, mingling people together from all walks of life," she said. Kirsten Nelson, a freshman general studies major, said the project had an impact. "I just think it is neat we are doing a service project for something other than just a project that will only be seen in class," she said.

Class'mural Children tell government why they will say no to drugs

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON - Asked what keeps them away from illicit drugs, more than 25,000 children replied: music, family and sports. Music was the No. 1 factor, followed by family and football, the government said Tuesday.

After that came friendship, dancing, "me," basketball, computers, soccer and biking.

The responses - ranging from a single word to a photograph to expressions in art, music or poetry - were collected as part of a four-month youth marketing campaign for children ages 9 to 17 that was funded by Congress. Spilling their hearts through the Internet and postcards, many of the children used phrases such as "my whole outlook" and "confidence," "self-esteem," "my life," "my dreams" and "self-respect" for wanting to stay drug-free. One child revealed that his

"dad died because of drugs." Another recalled how "my brother ruined his life and our family because of drugs."

The campaign, which began Sept. 1, is being overseen by Barry McCaffrey, director of the White House Office of National Drug Control Policy. It is slated to end early next month.

Among the ads featured: a television commercial titled "Dancing," in which children talk about their love of dance and how it motivates them to keep from experimenting with drugs.

One of the most encouraging trends for parents, McCaffrey noted, is that young people who are at an age when it might seem trendy to buck authority seem to be listening to their elders more than anyone thought.

The words and actions of parents, or other adult influencers, are more effective than they may think in keeping their children away from drugs," he said in a statement.

McCaffrey also pointed to a 1999 survey by the Department of Health and Human Services showing that 72 percent of 12- to 17-year-olds have never used illicit drugs. The campaign's $22 million budget comes from Congress. It is part of a five-year, $185 million-ayear national anti-drug multimedia campaign directed at youth that began in 1999. Congress approved three years' funding, and next year's budget is expected

one of the office's senior policy analysts assigned to the National Youth Anti-Drug Media

One of the main goals is to create an instantly recognizable slogan or "brand," like Smokey Bear, Maple said in an interview. The "What's Your Anti-Drug?" advertising campaign used the Internet to collect two-thirds of the responses. The rest came through mail, spokesman Robert Udowitz said.

Targeted ads feature slogans such as: "Parents. The Anti-Drug." Others include: "Love. The Anti-Drug' "Communication. The Anti-Drug."

For ads aimed at youths, it's

"My Anti-Drug."
The idea, Maple said, was to help children "realize that most kids have something in their lives, maybe more than one thing, that keeps them from using drugs.

"One of the messages we are trying to communicate to children is that not using drugs is normal. Some of the kids . . . get the idea that everybody's trying drugs, and it's just not true," he

Woes lessen holiday light time

SAN FRANCISCO - With electricity and natural-gas supplies in short supply, energy companies and state officials have asked Californians to delay turning on Christmas lights until well after nightfall and to keep thermostats set at 68 degrees.

Energy bills already are increasing dramatically, more than 50 percent in some cases. Pacific Gas and Electric Co. customers face an average bill of $77 this December. Last December, the average charge was $50, and PG&E said customers should expect much higher bills through the winter.

Utility officials said illuminating Christmas lights would be cheaper after 7 p.m. or 8 p.m. when electricity demand falls.

appliances, which are less expensive to use before 4 p.m. or after 7 p.m. Furnaces should be kept to 68 degrees maximum and turned back to 55 degrees when not at home, officials said. Even as the call went out to conserve energy, Gov. Gray Davis switched on the lights decorating the 56-foot white fir at the state Capitol, continuing a tradition dating to 1931. After five minutes, the lights were turned off until after the peak electricity "In some parts of California, people are going without power,' Davis said. "I would love to keep the lights on. But it's important that we all pull together to reduce the strain on the grid." The big jump in prices is partly due to decreasing natural gas supplies nationwide, said Claudia Chandler, assistant exec-
