NOTES.

Its an "airy" day when we get left.

There is a host in the fraternity of signs.

Several Dominites came up and smiled at our defeat.

Sweeney was with us, but left his pocket-book at home.

Quite a sprinkling of Wesleyan and Cotner University students were present.

The "Sigma Chis" had the "tallyho," and took in the game from its lofty height.

The small boy, without the necessary quarter, managed to find a hole in the fence.

THE NEBRASKAN score cards were admired by all. For enterprise we cannot be excelled.

Worthington Academy brought out a band wagon full of brass-buttoned youths, who enjoyed the game.

NEBRASKA, 10—IOWA, 10.

Nebraska is very apt to furnish a disagreeable stratum of air when some exciting contest like a foot-ball game is on hand, but seldom has she lowered the temperature to the freezing point, and mingled a drizzling rain with the elements as was the case in Omaha Thanksgiving when the great Nebraska-Iowa game took place. While only a few of Omaha's steam renovated and nursery bleached sports braved the chilly blasts to see the game, they at times wondered where they were at, and whence they came. No amount of cold weather will stop a student crowd when the crowning event of the school year is about to take place, so the crowd that went up from Lincoln make a strong comparison with about 300 Omaha spectators. Several Iowans came 250 miles to see their boys wallop Nebraska. All the while the financiers of the teams were trying to devise a plan whereby $205 could be made to cover over $450 worth of expenses, but they were forced to admit that each club must suffer to the tune of $125, which on the part of Nebraska had been stored up from local patronage in previous games at Lincoln.

The Omaha Athletic club was left in charge of advertising the game and the way they accomplished it was sad enough to cause the omnipotent Zeus to register a kick and press his electric button for zig-zag lightning sufficiently to pierce the hearts of the entire organization. When the managers of the Nebraska and Iowa teams came into Omaha two days before the game, they found practically no advertising done. The O. A. C. raked in 20 per cent of the receipts for taking charge of the game. If another game is played in Omaha, the advertising will be left in charge of interested parties, and not to any Omaha organization. The proper person to advertise an Omaha game hereafter should be the manager of the Nebraska team.

Our team, band, and cheerers went up in a special train over the Union Pacific. The whole train was tastefully decorated with scarlet and cream banners, and attracted much attention on the way. The boys marched up town behind the band, and did about as effective advertising as had before been accomplished. The Paxton had been selected as the stopping place, but a reluctance to let Flippin in came very near changing the place, and will do so hereafter. The managers of the Paxton ought to be in Halifax rather than any northern city of the United States. There was a great deal more old gold on the foot-ball field than scarlet and cream, which appeared strange.

To see the Hawkeyes put up such a fine game when two of their best men, Stiles the center rush, and Gillette, end, were not with the team, was a surprise to Nebraskans, and they don't yet understand how Kansas could beat them 24 to 4, and Missouri 24 to 0, when their full team was in the game. The best of feelings exist between the Iowa and Nebraska boys. Of course the latter thought they had an account to balance
