

one of the most scholarly and logical minds at the Nebraska bar, equity; W. H. Munger, the well known Fremont attorney, corporations; Hon. Frank Irvine, one the supreme court commissioners, damages; Hon. J. H. Broady, who has recently removed to Lincoln because of his large and increasingly important business, federal jurisprudence and practice; W. W. Giffin, of Pawnee City, one of the ablest attorneys in southeastern Nebraska, executors and administrators; Hon. John C. Watson, of Nebraska City, Supreme Justice Maxwell, of Fremont, and Judge W. G. Hastings, of the Fifth judicial district, whose names are household words in this state, criminal law, code pleading, and judgments and executions respectively; Mr. Jacob Faweett, the well known insurance attorney of Omaha, insurance, and Hon. S. H. Sedgwick, one of the ablest members of the York county bar, landlord and tenant. Mr. C. A. Robbins, a law writer of note, has been added to the list of instructors, and will have charge of the moot courts and will assist the dean generally in the quizzes.

The course has been simplified, and more systematically arranged. Some subjects have been dropped from the course in order to give more attention to those of most importance. The method of instruction has been changed also, and, instead of an almost purely lecture system, the student is encouraged to read for himself, and the result of his reading is brought out in the daily quiz on the subject. The difficult problems are discussed and explained, and wrong impressions corrected. This method of instruction is approximately what is known as the Dwight system.

The Law School starts out on its third year with the most promising prospects. A membership of fifty-two has already been enrolled, and others are constantly being added. With the hearty support of the University authorities, of which we feel assured, there is no valid reason why the College of Law should not become a well-recognized department of the University, and be the means of adding to its rapidly growing fame.

Exchange.

The recitation "hour" at Yale has been reduced to fifty minutes.

The enrollment of the Leland Stanford Jr. university is about 800.

Cornell is said to have 500 free scholarships, aggregating $150,000.

The members of Greek letter fraternities in the colleges number 77,000.—Exchange.

The University of Chicago opened on Oct. 2. The attendance already numbers over 1,000.

Harvard reports 2,804 students; University of Pennsylvania, 1,950; Princeton, 1,130; Oberlin, 1,300; Cornell, 1,600; Columbia, 1,552.

Co-operative book-buying is being agitated at the University of Kansas, and the University of Wisconsin. It seems to meet with success wherever it is tried.

Of the thirty young women who have applied for admission to post-graduate work at Yale, eight are from Smith college. Smith has a good reputation for hard and conscientious work.

The Rocky Mountain Collegian, from the agricultural school at Fort Collins, Colorado, announces with great solemnity that the enrollment has reached 115. This high-water mark is the more remarkable when the hard times and money stringency are considered.

The Courier, from the K. S. U., devotes several columns each week to foot ball, which seems to be the all absorbing topic among the students there. From the pages of the Courier one would infer that the erstwhile "invincible eleven" has a wholesome respect for the raw-boned young men from Baker
